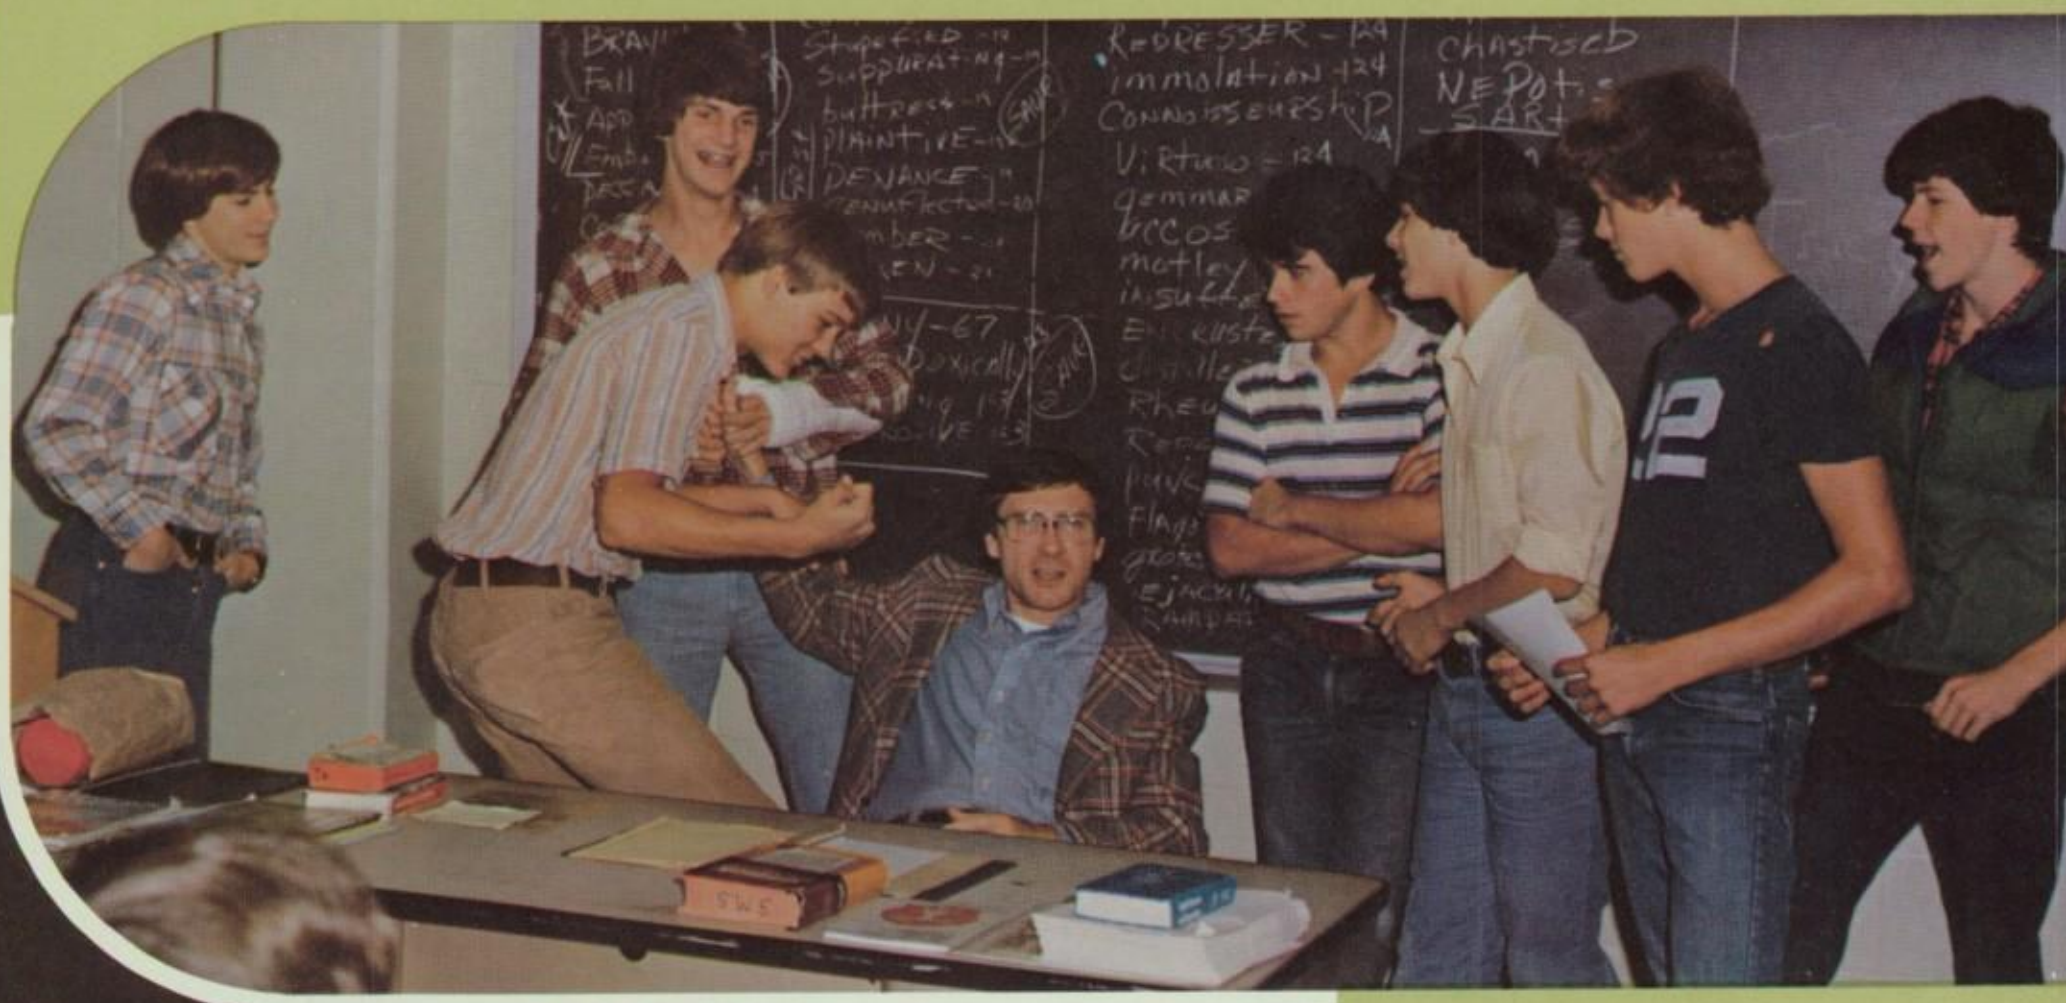
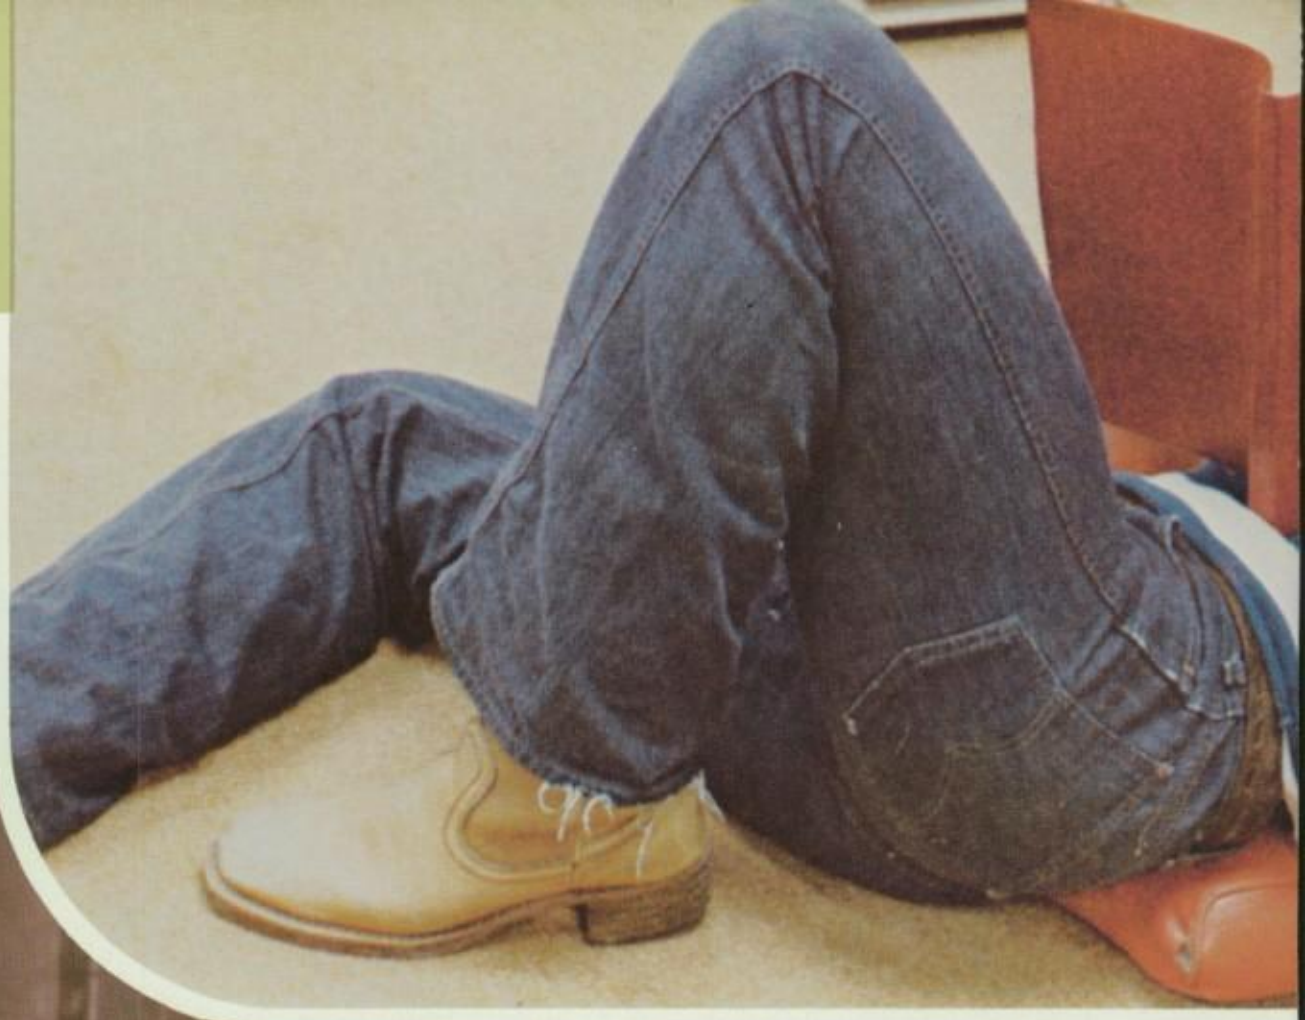
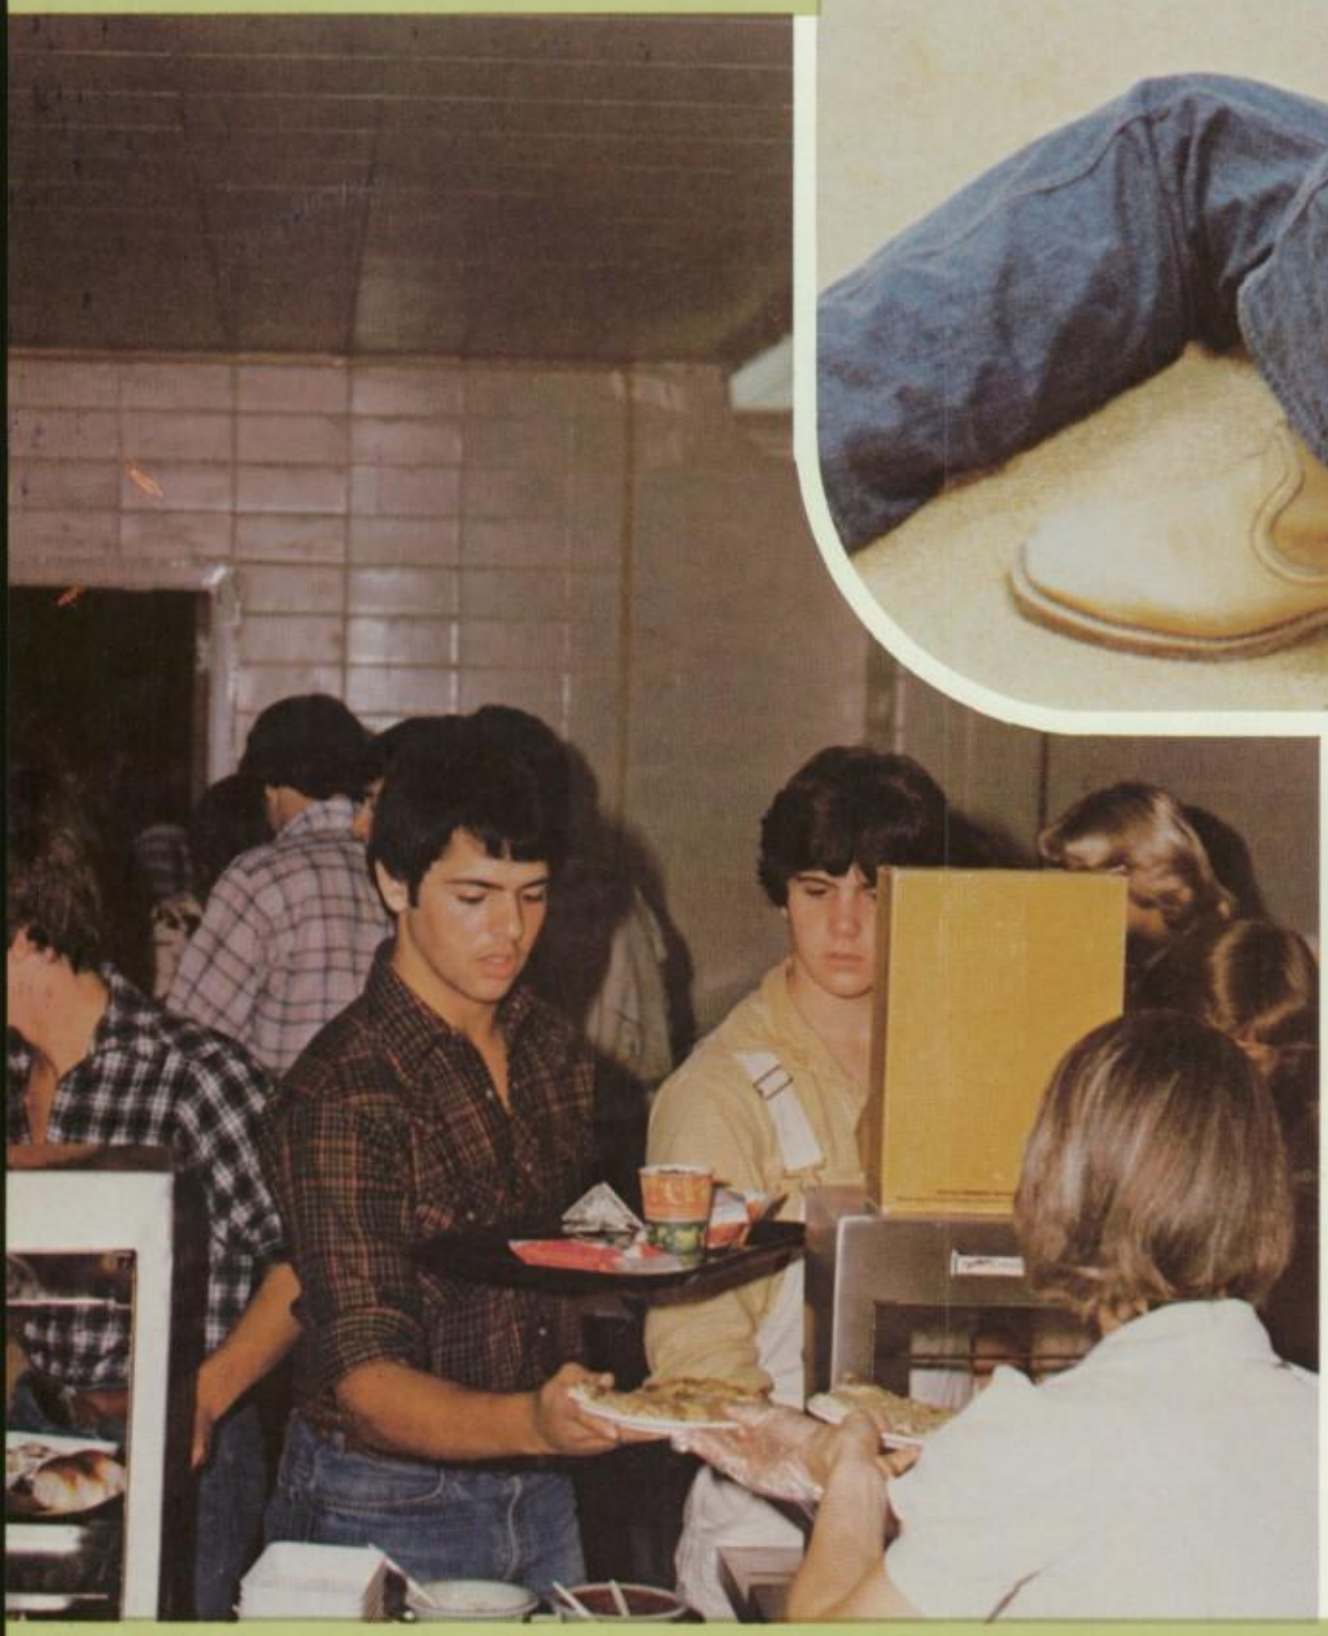
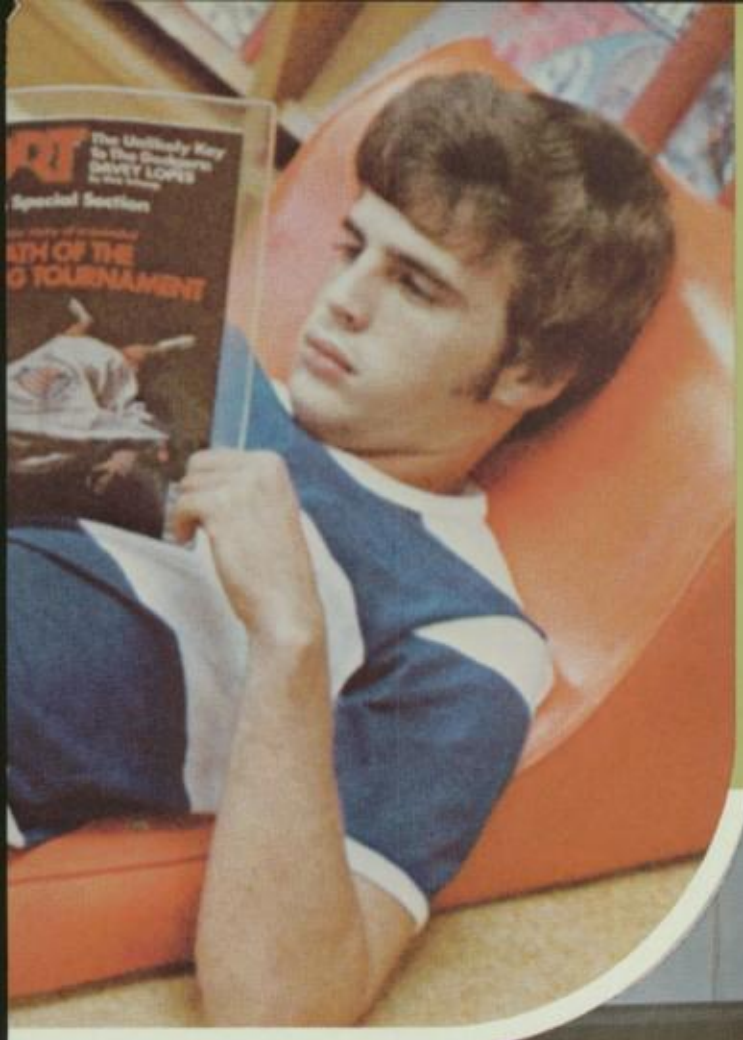
We who are at the peak of our high school years now look back on our past accomplishments with immense pride. All our lives we have been struggling within a success-oriented society, being urged to reach ever higher and to grasp the impossible. We have learned to compete with a variety of adversaries, some foreign to us, others very like ourselves.





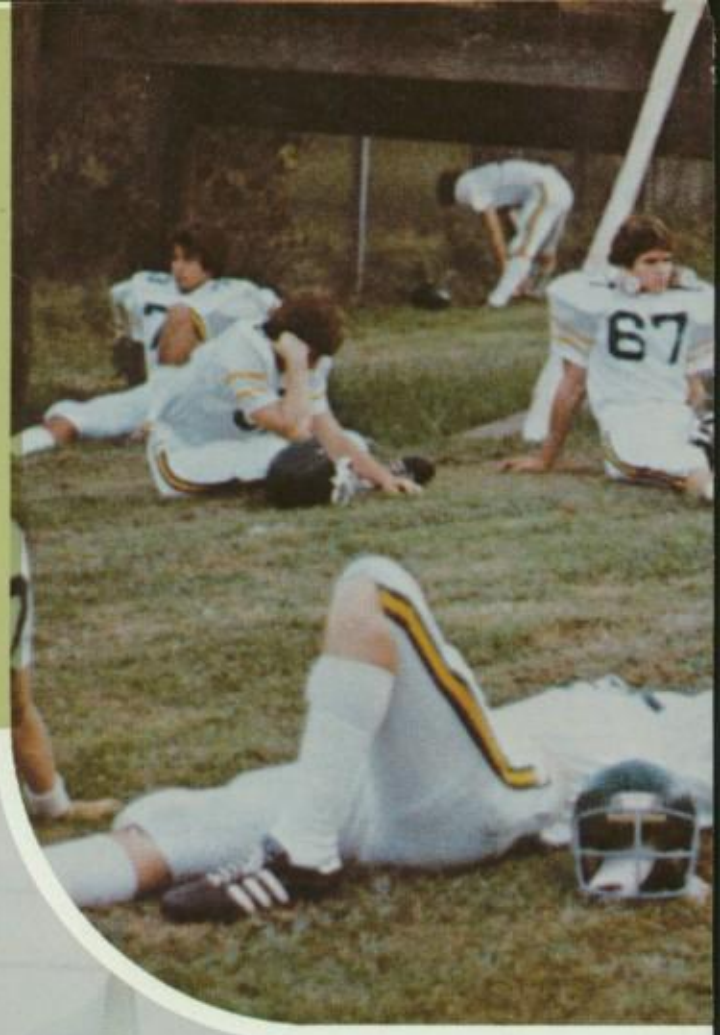


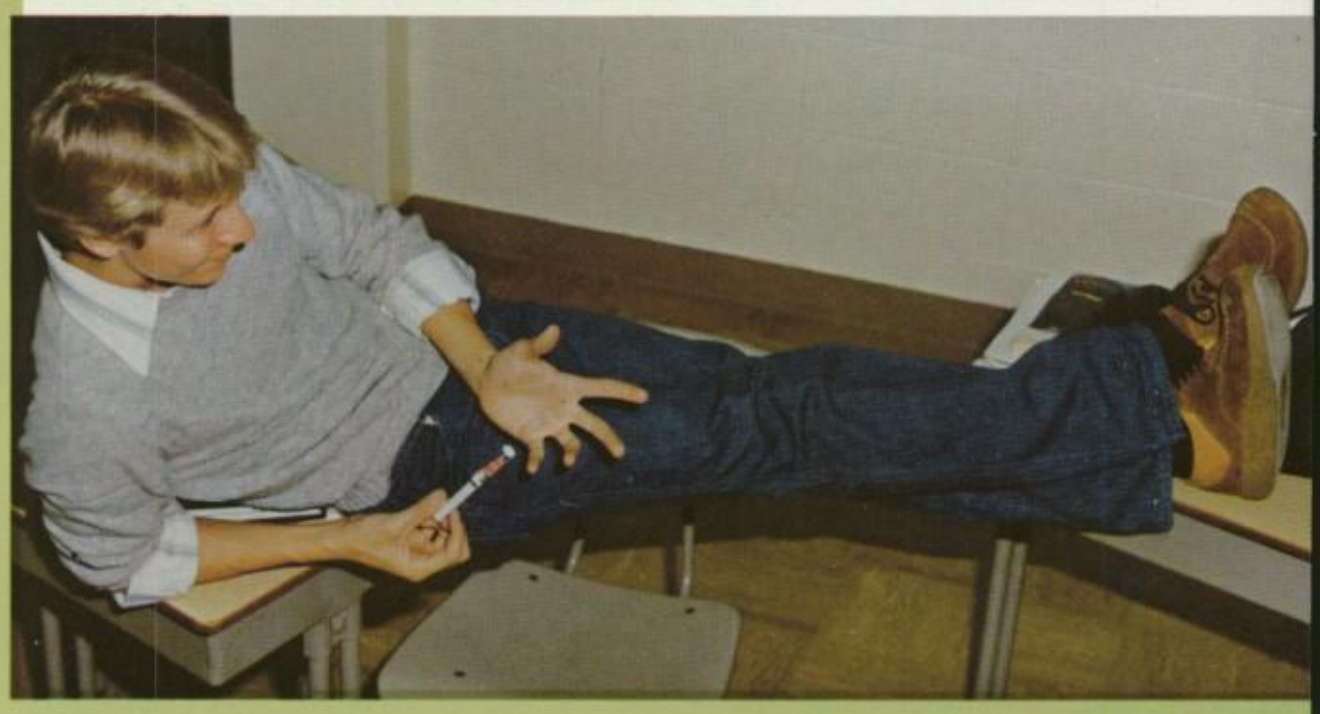
But as we have grown, we have learned that "success" can be represented in an infinite number of ways.

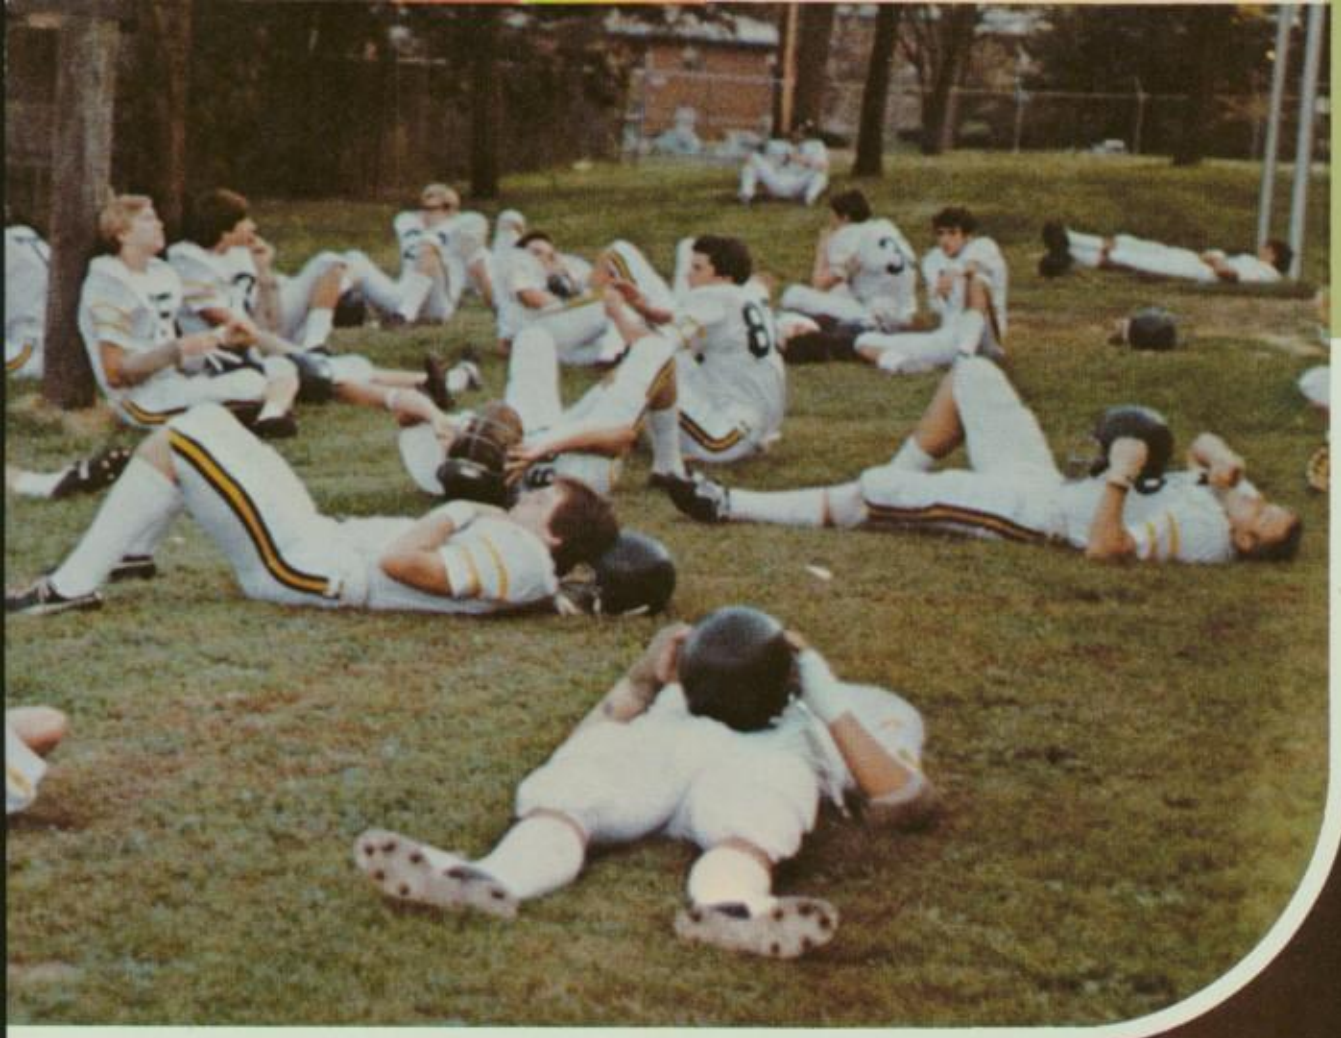


Since each of us must form his own sense of value, of what is truly important, we all have different images of what it means to win.

From the beginning, we have fought a hostile environment in a continuous battle for survival. Often feeling like an alien in earth's complex ecological system, we carved a precarious niche for ourselves in which we compete with all other animals.







Today, we tend to believe we have conquered this planet. But nature has a way of reminding us that we hold very little real power. We must learn to work with our environment, taking all we can from it without harming it or ourselves.

THOUGHTS FOR THE DAY

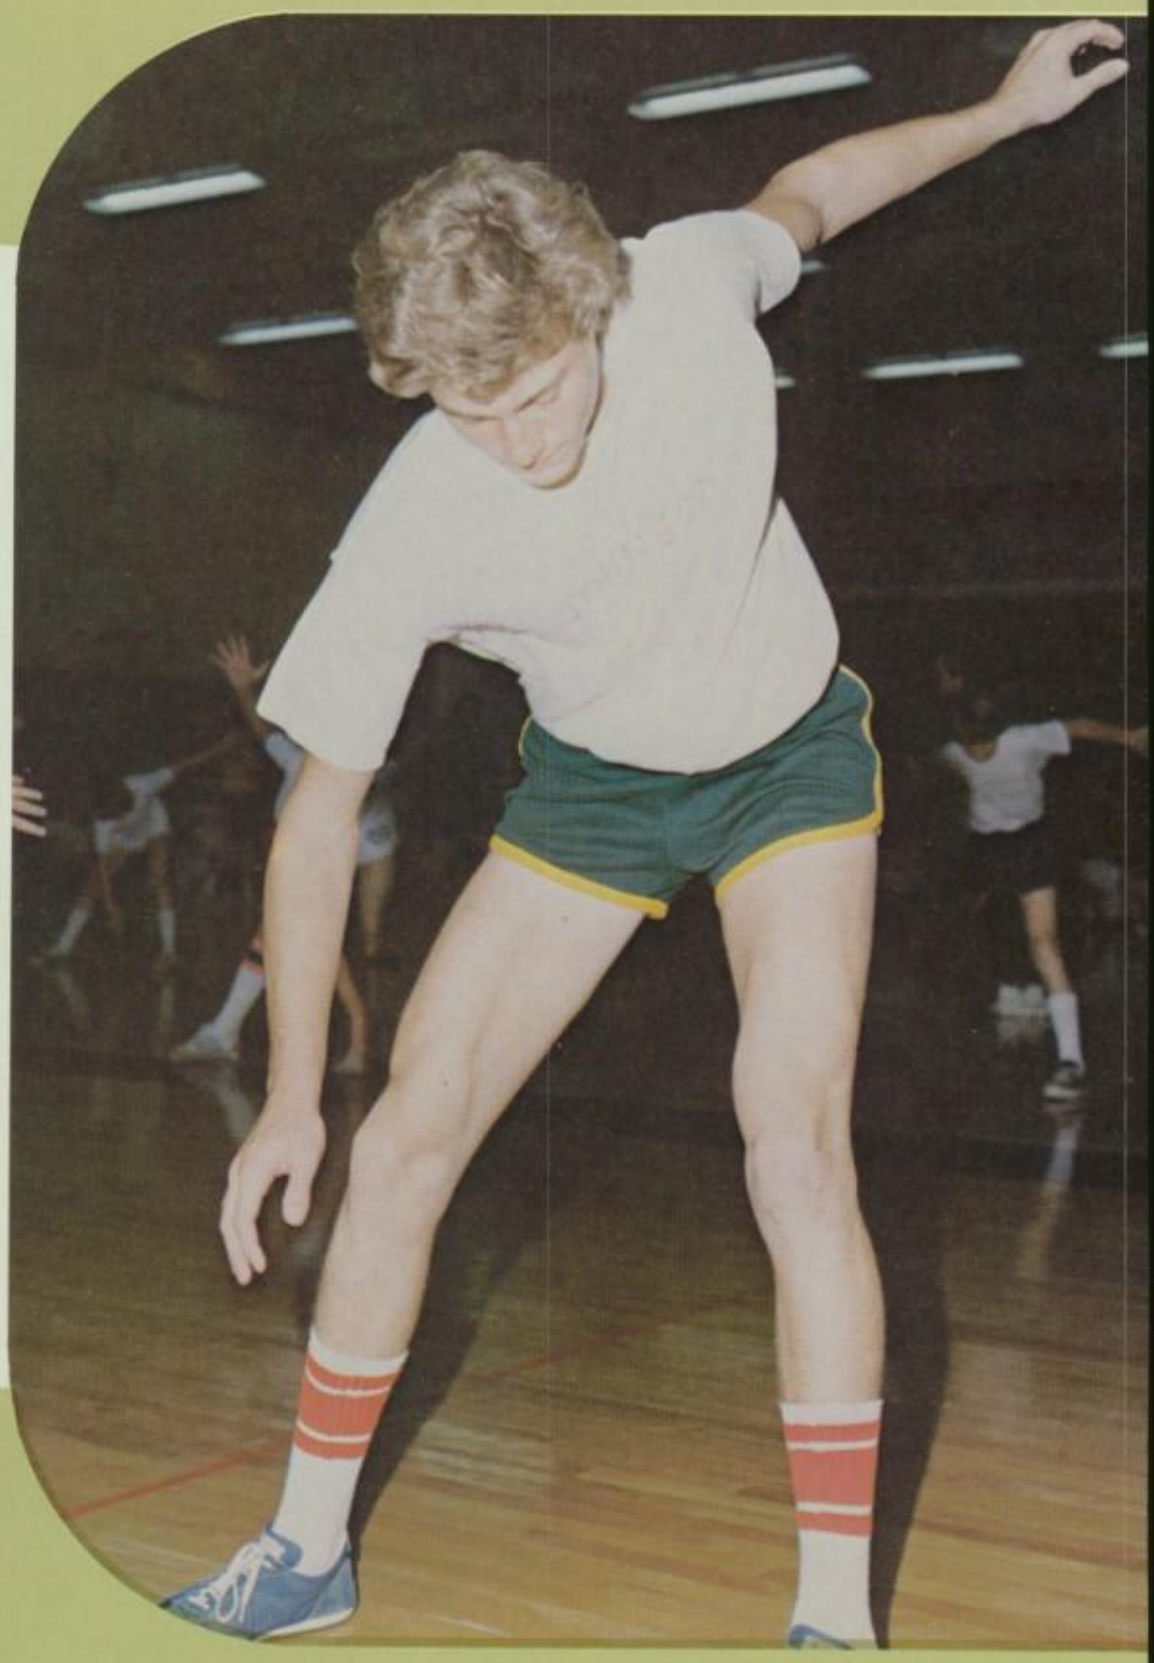
Undoubtedly, the bulk of our competition takes place among ourselves.



Considering that it would be impossible to succeed without the support of others, it is ironic that we must constantly compete with these same people in order to achieve a set goal. Our degree of success is determined by where we stand in relation to those around us.

22

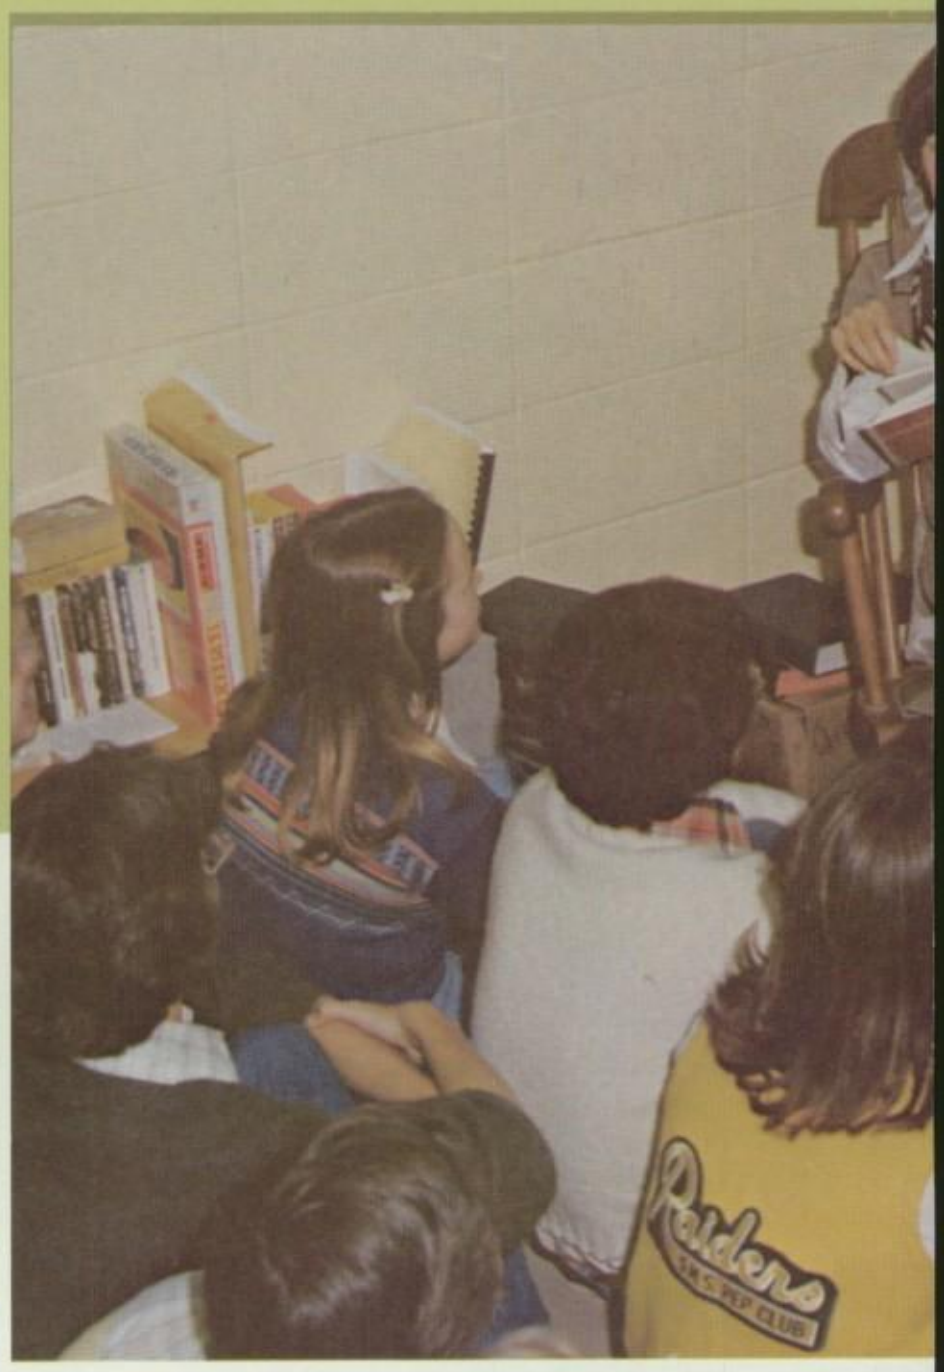
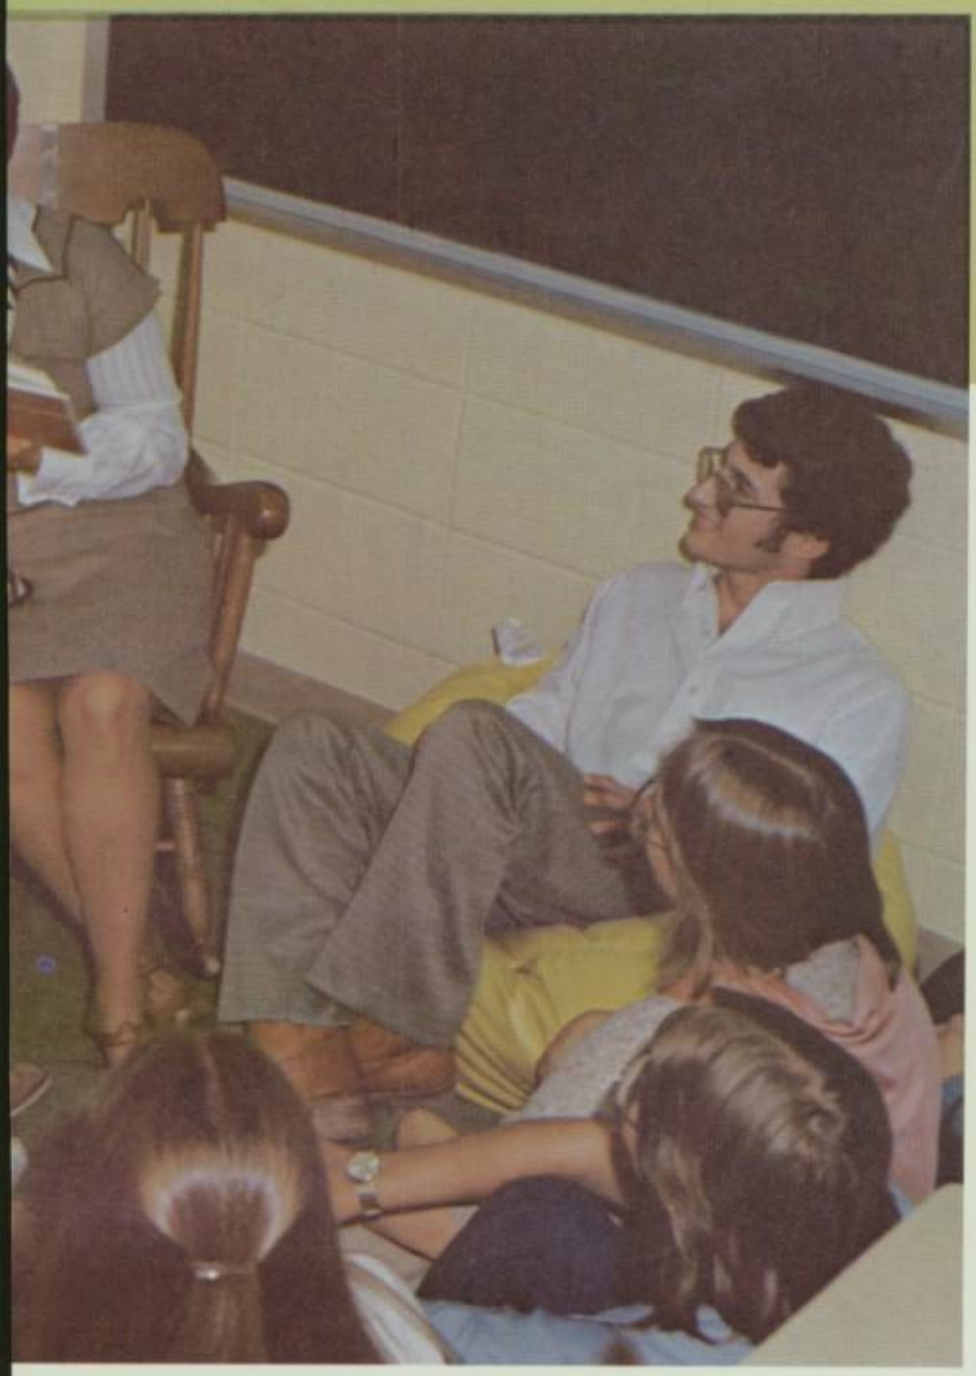
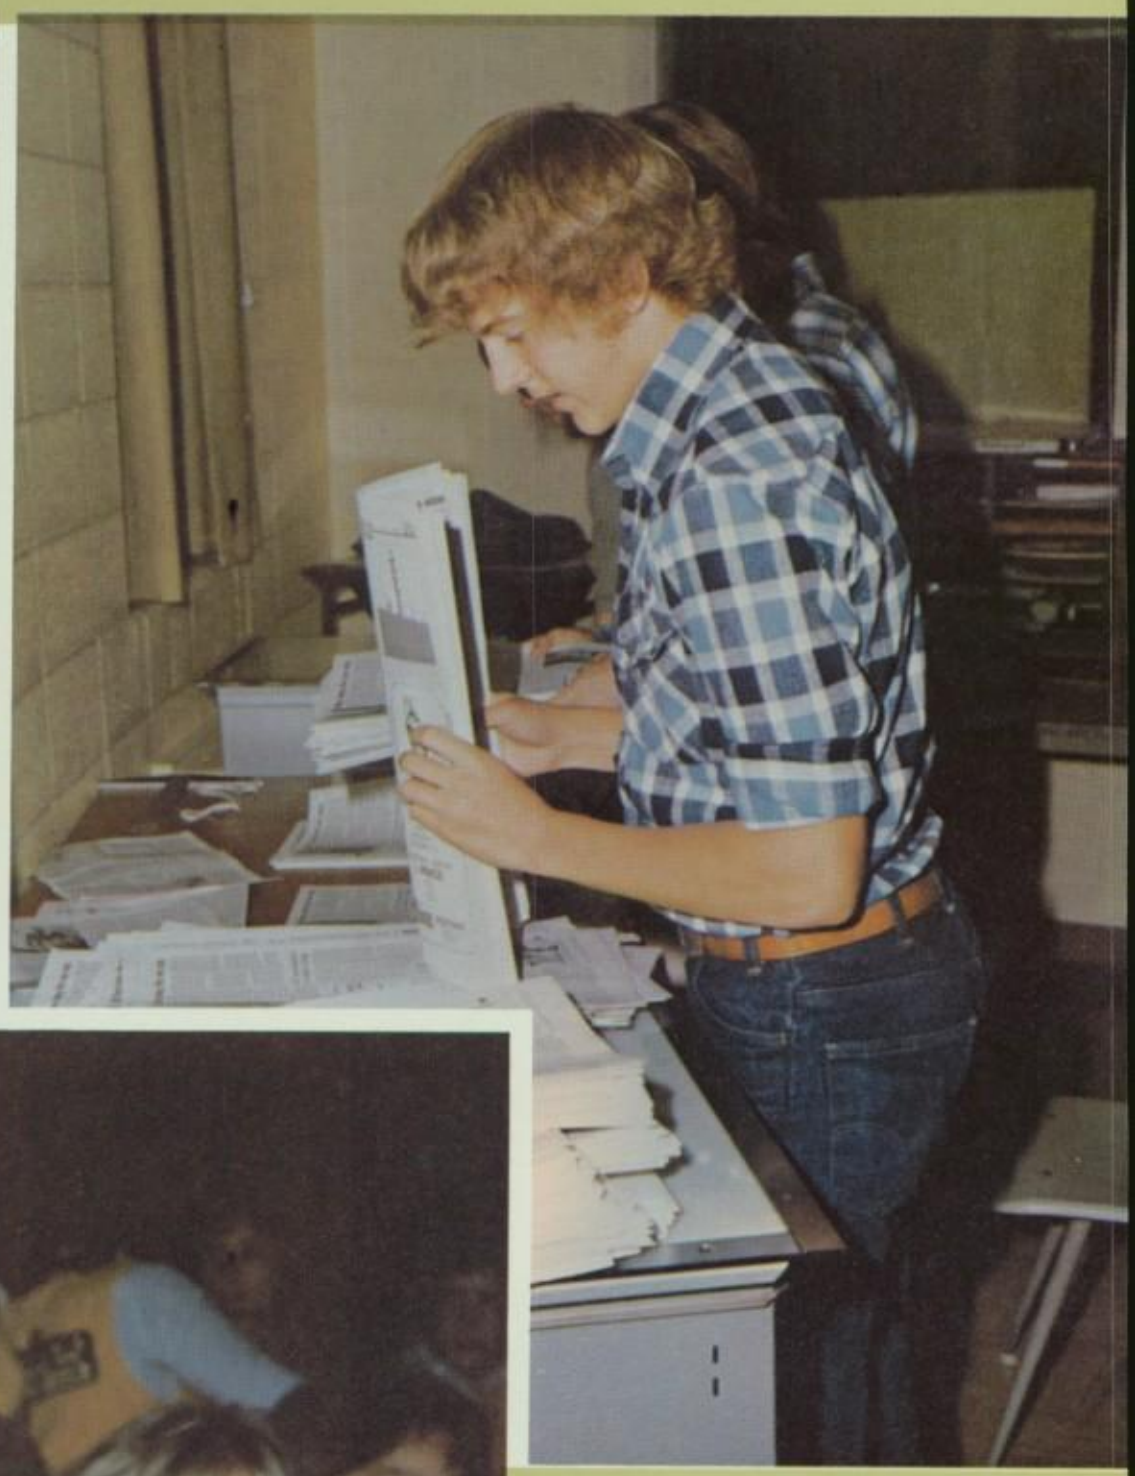
We achieve victories through both physical and intellectual tests of strength. The compulsion to rise to the top, and stay there, has always been strong in our nation. Winning is important if we want to "count."

Yet winning on the outside is not nearly enough. After we have returned from the victorious game or carried home the diploma, we must be sure in our own minds what we have truly accomplished.

Often, we must push ourselves to live up to an image others have conceived for us. They may judge us, but we also judge ourselves, assessing our worth as individuals and as human beings. If we are to continue our winning streak, we have to be true to ourselves and take pride in who we are. We must conquer an inner being, our own sense of self, before we can fight any outside foe and hope to emerge the victors.







The definition of success and how it can be measured has been pondered in the minds of professionals for centuries, but to no avail.

Our own quest for the answer was continually tested throughout our daily school lives.

As students, we continued through each day learning material which has been taught for years, yet was new to us. By the time we became seniors, we learned that to receive a grade was not the only thing, to be truly satisfied we had to feel enriched by what we had learned.

Our student congress became a strong, united body once again, as it lessened its number of participants and actively involved all members. The performing groups received top ratings throughout the year, but more importantly they formed close bonds with fellow team members and learned to work together. With the selection of a Homecoming King as well as a Queen, because of the Equal Rights Amendment, the Pep Club knew it was stepping on sensitive grounds. Yet the idea was taken seriously and a new tradition was started.

As we contested with our rivals in sporting events, we found that our goals were accomplished whether we won or lost, for we did not let our desire to win take precedence over the pride instilled within us.

When we look back on our high school years, we will not remember who had the most attractive outfit, owned the most admired car, or was the "right" person with whom to be seen. But instead, we will look back upon these years with either a general feeling of happiness or sadness, depending upon how we valued the feeling of achievement, whether the things we did were for the approval of our peers or the satisfaction of our inner self.

STUDENT LIFE

Remember when schools elected the best dressed girl, the most athletic boy, the most studious person, and the cutest couple? Everyone used to remember which students were the most successful by their titles. Although we no longer elected students to these positions in high school, we still recognized who they were. But we would have cheated ourselves if we had let the glamour of titles and the drama of attaining something big blind us to other means of accomplishment. Success represented by titles and positions was not and never could be applicable to everyone, thus we had to build our own definitions of achievement and tailor them to fit us individually. We respected those among us who were exceptionally popular and undeniably talented, but we also respected ourselves for our inner strength and our ability to excel in any phase of student life. Even small things like making a friend, receiving a card during the holidays, finding a job or securing a parking spot were all signs of success. When we set a goal, its nature was immaterial as long as it was worthy of our attaining it. Each of us grew to be successful in our own way.

Clinics provide opportunities for participants

Various groups, in preparation for the 77-78 school year, attended clinics throughout the summer, the first being Boys and Girls State.

Carla Bogucki, Pat Boppart, David Ball, Bob and Keith Zimmerman and John Hatcher traveled to Kansas University for the event. Pat Boppart was elected county sherriff and David Ball won a seat as a senator. Carla Bogucki, also a senator, passed her bar exam and received a degree in Law.

David Ball ventured further into politics during his summer break as he, Linda Rowe, Mindy Matthews and Marvita Oliver visited Marlborough High in Massachusetts. The students, along with Mr. Gary Gordon, Student Congress sponsor, Mrs. Jo Carroll and Dr. Dave Pendleton, school administrators, attended a convention for Student Congress. Marvita Oliver said, "Aside from getting lost between Boston and Marlborough, we had fun. It was a good experience."

Varsity cheerleaders attended a clinic at Tulsa University where they worked to enhance their cheerleading skills and take part in competition. After the clinic, the girls gathered the five blue ribbons, Award of Excellence, Spirit Stick and Superstar Award they had won and headed home. The Drill Team also came home with awards placing second in high kick at their clinics. Lynn Bradford was voted most outstanding marcher and Jane Westhues won runner-up for the title of Most Outstanding Girl.

Three directors head fall play

Without a good director the show can't go on. This year, unlike any year before, the drama department tried something new. The fall play, "Plaza Suite", provided the opportunity for three people to put together a sell out performance. Jan Breece, English teacher, directed Act I; Ben Stephenson, senior, directed Act II; and Gerald Snider, drama instructor, directed Act III. Mr. Snider felt this was an educational experience for both director and actor. The theme, dealing with the problems of marriage unified the three acts. The music preceding and following each act created an appropriate mood.

"I enjoyed it as much as the Broadway show."

Approximately 95 students auditioned for the 12 sophisticated parts. A majority of the students that auditioned were novice performers to the drama department. Eight of the 12 members of the cast had never performed in a South production. Along with the students the community played an important role in contributing to the effect of the performance. Merchants across the Johnson County area contributed by furnishing the set and outfitting the characters. To add to the excitement of the play, a well known actor from Waldo Astoria and former star from Laugh-In, Dennis Allen, took time out from his busy schedule to watch the performance.

Homecoming elicits dispute in honoring males

Reverse discrimination caused a commotion as the position of Homecoming King came into being for the first time. In the spring of 1977, the Pep Club officers, under the direction of Dr. Don Donaldson, agreed that according to Title IX, boys should be represented in the Homecoming ceremonies.

Title IX, located in the educational amendments, forbids discrimination on the basis of sex in educational programs or activities which receive federal funds. The title provoked mixed emotions throughout the halls during election week.

King candidates expressed their feelings about the event openly. Jim Wehrwien said "I think they are carrying the equal rights amendment too far."

"A King is a good idea, but no one will take it seriously."

Jeff Haun, the 1977 Homecoming King said, "I felt honored about winning, but I felt out of place."

Janice Teller, Pep Club President, wrote a rebuttal in the Patriot in favor of a King. She wrote, "If students in this school would let it, Homecoming King can turn out to be a highly sought after honor in the future."

By October 21, all controversy had diminished. As the band softly played the theme song "Time In A Bottle", six shining convertables circled the stadium track. Ann Giangreco, Homecoming coordinator, and all who worked on Homecoming preparations, watched intently as Leslie Gampper and Jeff Haun became the 1977 South Homecoming Queen and King.

Holiday spirit appeals to all

Everyone enjoys a holiday. Whether it's Christmas or the 4th of July, Valentines Day or Halloween, a holiday means celebration and sometimes a day or two away from school.

Although many holidays are religious in origin, everyone still enjoys the excuse to celebrate. Twenty-four holidays are listed in the '78 calandar, six are strictly Christian holidays, three are Jewish and the other 16 range from Mothers Day to Election Day, when some businesses close for the day.

During the Christmas season, some teachers held classroom parties. One of the most impressive was that of Mrs. Chris Becicka's 5th hour. They organized a full-course Christmas dinner which included turkey, the stuffing, ham and all the trimmings. Each student contributed to the celebration by preparing a dish. The holiday table was laden with Christmas decorations and goodies.

"One great thing about most holidays is there is no school."

French classes staged their own version of the celebration, Mardi Gras. A king and a queen were elected to reign over the carnival held on Tuesday before lent.

During the year, students utilized holidays to fatten the purses of their organizations. Deca sold candy canes, chocolates and peanut brittle during the Christmas season. The Symphonic Band sent carnations to the sweethearts of one's choice for Valentines Day.

To help pave the way for easing out the year, the Easter season was complimented with one week vacation. Spring break, March 20-25, saw students breaking from the routine of school by escaping to Padre Island, Fort Lauderdale or the mountains of Colorado.

Navy enrolls 48 in tenth year

NJROTC has been a part of the Shawnee Mission school curriculum since 1968. A voluntary course, "NJROTC is open to any student interested in becoming a better informed and responsible citizen," said Sgt. Chalmers Land, one of the ROTC advisors. During the school year, 48 students participated in the ROTC program. The program offered many activities in which the students could partake, including the "highlight of the year," which according to Sgt. Land, was the NJROTC Ball. Valerie Zavadil, through nomination by her peers, reigned as queen and was accompanied to the ball by Scott Hoerner. Another activity for ROTC members was the 22 caliviar rifle team, an activity in which students competed against other

Also in the spring, NJROTC hosted a trip to Pensacola, Florida. NJROTC sponsors a full four year scholarship to any member of the program who has excelled academically. The scholarship includes full tuition to the college of the candidates choice and $100 a month spending money. Candidates for the scholarship were Cheryl Bennett, Jean Moran, Brent Shaffer and Bob Zimmerman.

The dance, held on Feb. 11, displayed a traditional Valentine mood. Everyone danced to the song "You Light Up My Life" which had been chosen as the theme for the evening festivities.

Planning and organization of the dance kept Junior Vice President of Pep Club, Maureen Shay, busy throughout the preceding weeks. Working in conjunction with StuCo, she decided that, along with the candidates floor length dresses, the six male escorts would be attired in white tuxedos with tails.

Sellout show stems from work

After many hours of hard work, the music department presented West Side Story. One of the most complex productions in South's history, the musical sold out two of the three nights of performance. During rehearsal in the weeks prior to opening night, difficulties reigned. Complications, such as creating hate between cast members and complex choreographing dance numbers, constantly challenged the company. In the end however, the problems were mastered, and audiences walked away marvelling at the caliber of South's musicals. Intermission each night brought strangers together as people turned to anyone near to utter phrases like "Isn't it great?" and "Don't you love it?"

"Ms. Wiber must have magic. The choreography was unreal."

Audiences seemed to take to West Side Story in spite of the tone of hatred. Racial differences divided the cast into one of the two opposing gangs, Sharks or Jets. Mock rivalry between the two groups off stage enabled the hatred on stage to appear more realistic. Stirring up this hatred was one of the major problems according to Dr. Don Donaldson, head director. Though the racial aspect of West Side Story may have been difficult for South students to understand due to the lack of such a conflict in the Shawnee Mission district, no one seemed to have too much trouble relating to the romantic tone of a modern Romeo and Juliet.

Crews stay on top of it all

From a technical point of view West Side Story stood apart from other musicals in that the crews stayed ahead of schedule thus avoiding any major problems that might have occurred. Patty Beard, director of painting and construction of the set, said she was amazed at the crews efficiency considering the complexity of the set. The set crew handled the difficulty of creating a closed in inner city feeling without cutting off the audience's view, while light crews worked to create night scenes light enough to see the actors and their expressions.

Davies Mildrexler came up with the basic set concept. Patty Beard modified it, and Keith Zimmerman commanded a group to make it a reality. The scene on the back drop was taken from a painting by Lionel Fieninger, and then it was adjusted to fit the musical's purpose by the group in charge of painting.

Several girls spent hours sewing costumes to further enhance the musical's theme. Those students selling tickets found themselves swamped with business from the moment the ticket stand opened. Posters advertizing West Side Story and the programs were designed by Caroline Burnett and produced in South's production center as opposed to a commercial printer. The musical kept all involved extremly busy; however, most attest to the fact that it was a fantastic experience.

"The work is long and hard, but I wouldn't miss it!"

Royalty chosen for involvement in school ado

Senior summaries serve another purpose besides the well known acknowledgment of friends with superfluous hi's, bye's and I love you. They also contain the vital information with which two Heritage staffers compiled the Heritage Royalty.

Early in February, juniors Karen

"I don't even remember doing all the stuff I did."

Martin and Carla Cohen reviewed 550 senior summaries and chose those 20 girls and 20 boys who displayed extensive school involvement and leadership throughout their high school years.

In order to become one of the 40 chosen, the students had to participate in three different school activities with accomplishment in each area of involvement.

Next, all other juniors on the yearbook staff voted on the candidates to reduce the number to 20. For one week, 10 boys' and 10 girls' pictures and senior summaries adorned the StuCo window so that students had a chance to make their final choices.

The 1978 Heritage Queen and King were Carla Bogucki and Kevin Hutchens, with Kathy Lefko and Jim Adams the 1st attendants, and Lynn Grossman and Dave Bowers rounding out the royal court.

Carla Bogucki kept herself busy by being the editor-in-chief of the yearbook, and Kevin Hutchens played the part of Tony in the musical "West Side Story."

Night world brings dawn of excitements

When the sun went down a new world dawned and night life began. Different people came up with varied solutions as to how the late hours should be spent. To some it meant fast cars going no where in particular, a quick bite to eat and back on the road to general mischief. Other people found elegant dinners at places such as Alameda Plaza, Trader Vic's and Plaza III more to their taste. The Christmas season drew many out to see the lights and to shop, and ending dates by a walk on the Plaza seemed very popular throughout the year.

"I love to get dressed up and take my date out to eat."

The discos such as Pogos and Bananas harbored a good deal of high school dates. For those who didn't have a party to go to, discos proved to be a reasonable substitute. Going out didn't necessarily mean a date. Groups of girls or guys seemed to be just as prevalent.

Of course many students spent the late hours working, while some found the night time hours a time for sleep after hectic days and homework. Never-the-less everyone had something to do and each had their own conotation of the term night life.

Plain outfits enlivened by '78 accessories

A dull last year's outfit could have been enlivened with a new flourish of accessories. As always, accessories continued to play an integral part in the fashion of American life. Styles changed, but the importance of adding something to one's appearance still flourished.

This year hosted an array of new ideas for accessories. Jewelry, though usually popular, played an important role in furnishing accessories. Stick-pins, status chains and flower pins were the most popular among jewelry wearers. A new trend in fashion, double peirced ears, increased the use of an accessory, earrings. Instead of buying one pair of earrings, women were buying two, and with the short hair styles, post earrings were most frequently worn.

"But if I don't have a stick pin I won't be in fashion."

Shawls, thin silver and gold belts, boot toppers and scarfs, were also popular with female students. These accessories combined or worn separately contributed to the effect of a fashionable outfit.

Accessories played a role in the male wardrobe as well. Down-filled vests and hiking boots were typical attire for the male students at South.

Thus, with the help of a weeks pay check, that dull ordinary outfit was turned into an exciting, vivacious and intriguing new ensemble.

Graceland lord tragically takes his final bow

Elvis Presley, the King of Rock, shattered music lovers when he died August 16, in his Memphis mansion, at the age of 42. A massive heart attack took his life and a fragment of most people's heart with it. Dave Marsh, a writer of the Rolling Stones magazine, gave Elvis this tribute. "He was the king in our hearts . . . he will always be our king: forever, irreplaceable."

Only one month later, tragedy struck again, but much closer to home this time. From a trickling creek, to a raging wall of water, Brush Creek transformed the Country Club Plaza into a mildewed mass of muck. Many citizens felt the effects of the September 12 flash flood, either by having a car swept away or possibly finding a basement full of water. Because many did not heed the flash flood news warnings, 25 people died in what was called the worst disaster in Kansas City history.

"We are due for some good news anytime now."

Good news overcame the tragedy when the Royals baseball team won the Western Division Championship. "Royalmania" prevailed and champagne showered the Royal's locker room as everyone awaited the World Series. But the champagne turned to silent tears when the Royals lost to the Yankees in the last playoff game.

In other areas, "Star-Wars" a science fiction movie, became a box office block buster, the energy crisis remained a major problem, and the retirement age jumped to 70, all in the course of the year.

ORGANIZATIONS

South based most of its membership in organizations on the audition, the try-out, the election. In reaching for our various goals, most of us faced numerous defeats and setbacks. Winning acceptance into a group was rarely easy; competition was high and the work demanding. Those of us who were truly enthusiastic and undaunted strove to achieve these goals by battling obstacles every inch of the way. Not satisfied with just a single yard, we fought for and gained another, and then a third and a fourth until we had accumulated a long battled-for mile. When we reached the summit, made the grade by winning our way into an elite group, we could be proud of our persistence and determination. But we could not be truly successful until we learned to interact with our peers in different phases of school organizations. As John Donne once wrote, "No man is an island." Being involved meant we must join a group. We then depended upon the guidance of the sponsor and the support of other group members, and in turn were expected to fulfill our end of the bargain. This interdependence remained the key to any successful and enjoyable organization.

Southern

Club orients new students

During the course of the year, over a hundred transfer students enrolled at South. Show Me South club helped these students adjust to this foreign situation by familiarizing them with their classes, including a tour of the auditorium, gymnasium and library. After the tour, the students arranged to meet for lunch in the cafeteria. Show Me South members tried to maintain friendships throughout the year. Mr. Phil Larson, counselor, sponsored the Show Me South Club. Twenty-nine members comprised the five-year-old club. Members also assembled the yellow activities calendar issued to each student and teacher early in September.

"I would be totally lost without Show Me South Club."

Girls who joined Anchorettes were those who enjoyed helping people less fortunate than themselves. They raised money for children afflicted with leukemia by selling licorice and holding bake sales. Anchorettes served as official hostesses of South and performed at school events and area parades, as well as football and basketball games. Members marched alongside NJROTC officers as a color guard to the flag. Sargeant-Major C. K. Land sponsored the 12 member group, who wore yellow cotton dresses, changing to a green corduroy skirt and vest when cold weather set in. At their weekly meetings, Anchorettes exchanged fund-raising ideas, practiced marching drills and often enjoyed refreshments.

Bagel vending earns dollars for culture club

Members of International Club actively involved themselves in the many cultural and social programs held during the year. The organization, headed by President Debra Winston and executive members Lisa Hanschu and Dave Bowers, provided a way for both foreign and American students to acquaint themselves with each other's cultures. Members attended holiday parties and football games as well as bi-weekly business meetings. Foreign language teacher June Farson and sociology teacher John Seevers sponsored the activities. Each year, the club takes on the responsibility of raising one thousand dollars in order to sponsor an AFS student. Students accomplished the goal by staging unusual fund raising events. The club's annual Bagel Day contributed many profits, as did popcorn balls and candy sales. Highlighting the year was AFS Day, when exchange students from all over Kansas City visited South and spent the night with a South family. Debra Winston, president, commented, "The club is an integral way for the foreign students to get to know American kids and feel at home during their stay in the United States."

Trivia recall key to victory

The "Outstanding player of the Year" award became the new addition to the categories agenda. Chosen out of all the Shawnee Mission players, one player accepted the award. This became incentive for all players in the district to work harder.

Chris Becicka coached her group in practice sessions Monday after-school and Thursday before school. Often she asked that they bring 10 questions to practice to try out on the team. Usually Ms. Becicka used questions out of a home Jeopardy game and any number of trivia and nostalgia books now popular at book stores.

Five players with the best records by the Thursday practice earned the chance to participate on the show taped Monday afternoons at Northwest's TV studio. The Categories show, shown on channel 10A on Tuesdays at 7 p.m. and 11 p.m. was hosted by Larry Wagner, a local television personality.

Ms. Becicka said the students involved in categories possess retentive minds, often answering questions ranging from baseball to classical music to current events.

Size reduction spawns leaders

Working from an early set-back with the cancellation of the Pogo's party, StuCo strove to achieve its goal of becoming a more unified organization by reorganizing its membership. With equal representation from each class, only 45 students served as representatives. The representatives reported to approximately two homerooms each, every second week.

"Gaining peer support would make StuCo more effective."

The officers traveled to Boston during the summer to attend a national Student Council workshop. The two most beneficial ideas learned by the officers turned out to be correct ways to present proposals to the administration and the forming of a leadership workshop for all StuCo members. The workshop, held at JCCC, took place Oct. 10 and helped bring the members together as a close governing body. Multiple Sclerosis and Cancer became the charities in which StuCo took special interest. Ticket sales from the "battle of the sexes" volleyball game, held on Oct. 25, made up the donation of $635.11 presented in check to the United Way.

DECA creates future sellers

Distributive Education Clubs of America, composed of marketing and retailing classes, were involved in a variety of projects throughout the year. Two junior chapters and a senior chapter took part in fundraising, including the sale of candy, Raider hats and discount coupon books. Members devoted much time to community service, evidenced when students helped the Merchants Association of the Country Club Plaza clean up flood damage and with other volunteer projects. Seniors in the club were enrolled in On-the-Job Training with employers who were willing to cooperate with the program. DECA sponsored various employer-employee coffees and luncheons and ended the year with a banquet. Vicki Jennings sponsored the club's activities.

Office education classes trained students for clerical, secretarial and data processing work. Students were placed in training stations to exercise the skills they learned in class.

Sports Support

Girls support male athletes

Boys winter sports received help and support from enthusiastic female groups. The Goodtimers timed and scored for boys swim meets, and they proved to be loyal rooters for the South swimmers. Girls organized in the fall, learned the correct way to start and read a stopwatch and ordered shirts for all members. The girls were sponsored by Coach Bruce Bove.

The Pin-Ners and wrestling managers acted as an auxiliary to the Raider matmen. Clad in painter pants and green shirts, the girls attended all matches and provided incentive support. Girls were assigned a wrestler for each match for whom to provide water and assistance. Coach Guy Malone sponsored the Pin-Ners.

Serving as football statisticians, Marvita Oliver and Sue Bowman kept track of yardage, tackles and points for the various coaches. Doing the same for the basketball teams, Sara Samuels, Janet Mittenfelner and Karen Samuels recorded points and fouls. The girls work was greatly appreciated by Coaches John Davis and Paul Sexton.

Spirit group adds new life to Pep Club

The Spirit Club added new life to Pep Club activities. The group comprised itself of boys and girls who wished to support sports but not be required to earn points. The only requirement of the group became the purchase of a $5.00 yellow and white rugby shirt decorated with the "South Spirit Club" emblem printed in green.

Pep Club faced a stormy year set off by the abolishment of all-school pep assemblies by the administration. Two senior and four junior officers made due with closed assemblies for Pep Club, athletes and Pep Band.

"It gives a sophomore an opportunity to be involved at South."

Janice Teller, president, felt that this ruling excluded many members of the student body who liked participating in pep assemblies. "If the trouble makers would go to the study halls provided instead of acting like grade school kids during assemblies, Mr. Johnson's low opinion of student courtesy would cease to exist."

Pep Club earned a new headquarters for conducting business. During all three lunch periods, Pep Exec. officers staffed a window in the room built off the cafeteria. There, members asked questions, bought buttons and Raider pens and turned in point cards. Sophomores found the window a helpful place to air their special problems and circumstances which could only be dealt with by a Pep Club officer.

Mr. Chris Bar charges on

After every touchdown the school mascot Leslie Gadow, mounted on Mr. Chris Bar, galloped wildly in front of the stands, waving her three-cornered hat. Leslie donned her bright velvet uniform and tied green and yellow ribbons in her horse's tail for each game. Leslie, who rode at all home football games, has been riding since childhood. Mr. Chris Bar came into her life six years ago. Leslie said, "I enjoyed the excitement of the games and felt it was a unique way to get involved."

Flying batons, swords and torches flew over Deena Corn's head as she twirled for the cheering crowd at half-time shows. She practiced at least two and a half hours a day on her routines, performing different ones at each show. Deena began baton lessons nine years ago and has accumulated over 170 awards since then.

"A few more performances and we wouldn't need fund raisers."

Raiderettes, a marching group comprised of six girls, performed a different routine at each home football and basketball game. The routines were composed by the girls themselves. They carried real rifles, not wood or plastic ones, as many students supposed.

To raise money for their trip to the Wichita Marching Festival, Raiderettes held bake sales and sold milk duds. Ms. Patty Beard, art teacher, sponsored the group, which performed at both girls and boys varsity basketball games. "We felt that girl's basketball deserved support too," said Mary James, Raiderette secretary and treasurer.

Drilldown aids team precision

Do you know what a "drill-down" is? It's a procedure Flag Team members went through before many performances. The girls performed the routine until they made a mistake, then they had to drop out. This forced them to concentrate more intensely in perfecting the routine. In this way, quality prevailed.

Another Flag Team tradition involved "big sisters." Each second-year member acted as a "big sister" to one or two first year members. Little sisters received anonymous notes and gifts of encouragement during the performing season. Big sisters revealed their identities at a party staged later in the performing year.

"In practice we either look like bananas or Woodstocks."

Eating dinner together before every home game continued yet another tradition. Each time, four or five members arranged the meal. Menus ranged from Mexican food to a catered sandwich affair. These dinners provided a means for the girls to establish close friendships. "The most important aspect of Flag Team is the unity you establish and the close friendships you develop," remarked Teresa Rogers.

Team performs in Dodge City

In addition to practicing and performing, the Pacesetters lived under a set of rules for as long as they participated on the squad. Forbidden actions included drinking, smoking, truancy and the use of drugs. Girls also could not wear jeans on campus. Their attire consisted of dresses and nice pants. Breaking these rules resulted in benching or dismissal of the girl from the squad. The Constitution became a major commitment to Drill Team members.

Led by captain Julie Cusick, the Pacesetters performed at home football and basketball games, parades, festivals, college tournaments and ended the year with the annual extravaganza. The group spent much time raising money in order to travel to Dodge City for tournament competition in the spring.

"Drill Team has brought me lifelong friendships."

The Pacesetters placed second in dance competition and were awarded nine ribbons in marching, dance and pom pon at summer clinic held at Kansas University. Lynn Bradford, secretary, received the Outstanding Marcher award and Jane Westhues, junior, was runner-up in the Outstanding Dancer competition. The squad also received one of five special awards given for the most entertaining novelty routine. Members of the Drill Team practiced during the fourth hour period as well as before and after school to perfect their routines. The girls had to try out prior to each show and the top 32 girls performed. Sharon Wiber directed the Pacesetters for the tenth year.

Band receives highest rating at competition

The Marching Band upheld its tradition of excellence by earning the highest rating given at the Wichita State Marching Festival. The festival became the highlight of a season which included six home game performances, the Overland Park parade and the Shawnee Mission Marching Festival. Because of bad weather, the Shawnee Mission festival had to be postponed, and as a result the fine performance by the band members was not rated because the visiting judges could not be present. Allowing other schools in the area to experiment with different marching styles, South's band focused on precision and their traditional marching style. President Bob Compton, Vice President Suzette Simes, Treasurer Terry Hazen, Historian Karen Kimmel and Librarians Debbie Mayberry and Laura Hanson aided Mr. Jim Cochran in insuring a successful year full of band pride.

"Our precision group has something no one else has: B.P."

For the second year in a row, Pep Band split into two groups. The Green Pep Band, directed by Bob Compton, played mainly for Drill Team performances, Pep Club assemblies and before school rallies. The Gold Pep Band, with its co-directors Scott Ellison and Chris Kohl, practiced two to three mornings a week and played mainly for the Flag Team. The two Pep Band system was invented to give more band members a chance to perform in a small ensemble and as a means of coping with the unreal performance schedules that Pep Band is confronted with. The volunteer efforts of the members of both bands created an added spirit boost to school activities.

Hectic agenda for pep squads

Overly hectic schedules for the sophomore and junior varsity cheerleaders kept the 16 talented girls busy during both football and basketball seasons. Pre-game dinners given for cheerleader squads from visiting schools to promote spirit became a time consuming activity. The squads enjoyed decorating the stadium for football games with Pep Club signs from the halls. The JV squad cooked breakfast for the JV football players one morning before school during the week of their last game. In preparation for each season, time for homework was shortened further by daily practices after school. As cheers and routines were polished, practices lessened to once a week. The girls truly fulfilled their job of supporting all sports teams and events. Cindy Reese, JV co-captain stated, "We're always baking cookies or something for the teams as good luck tokens to show we care." Funded by candy sales of Hot Tamales, Jolly Ranchers, Milk Duds and Sweet Tarts, the sophomore cheerleaders afforded new uniforms. Voting in their respective squads, the girls chose Sue Scardino and Kim Thurman as captains, while Cindy Reese and Ann Benson served as co-captains.

Squad wins highest award

Led by head cheerleader Lynne Grossman, the Varsity Cheerleaders spent a busy year supporting all sports teams. Often, the girls were required to attend one or more events each day of the week as well as keep up satisfactory school work. The varsity squad attended a summer clinic held in Tulsa, Oklahoma and performed well. They received five blue ribbons, three spirit sticks,

"When we boogey, we really boogey-woogey."

the super star squad and the award of excellence. The girls incorporated many of the ideas they learned into cheers and routines.

Adding more voice power and aerial stunts, the eight yell leaders helped the girls support Raider competitors. They developed a close camaraderie with the cheerleaders, resulting from joint practices, kidnap breakfasts and pre-game dinners. Both groups were sponsored by Linda Segebrecht.

ACADEMICS

Success in a high school world involved the passing of many tests. On the academic side of our lives, we labored over themes, formulas and history dates in an effort to learn what had gone before and what could be useful to the future. In addition, music, drama and art courses provided us with a unique opportunity for finding another part of ourselves, for recognizing our full potential and expressing it—for succeeding as individuals. Academic skills were important to achievement, thus we were constantly being tested to determine the extent of our knowledge. As we learned, we grew. Teachers often had a great impact on our school career and on the way we viewed the worthiness of our education. Deservedly, teachers succeeded only when their pupils were succeeding.

Opinions vary on homeroom

Meeting every Thursday for one half hour, homeroom period helped to increase communication between students and teachers. Because of enlarged class sizes, teachers did not have much time to spend with individual students. Administrators hoped to give students a teacher with whom they could identify and talk over school-related problems.

"It could be beneficial if we did something useful."

Ideally, students would keep the same homeroom instructor for three consecutive years, thereby having a permanent channel to the faculty and administration. However, this plan depended on the initial success or failure of the homeroom class period.

Topics debated in homeroom

The homeroom period drew many mixed opinions from the students. From 11-11:30, every Thursday, the homeroom classes met. Administration, counselors, learning center coordinators, career education leaders, librarians, the nurse and other student services talked to classes on topics ranging from anthropology to the history of downtown Overland Park.

The careers center gave those students who plan to go into business a chance to experiment in different fields of study and discover which best suited them. Headed by Reve Wilson and Dennis Butler, the course included a series of speakers, lectures and group discussions. A recent development in the careers center is the consortium program. The program enables those students who wish to leave school early and work or attend a community college a chance to participate in the program.

"After a topic is discussed there is nothing more to say."

Another section of the student services, the learning center, devised a program for those students who needed some extra help in their classwork. Tim Burkindine and Ruth Holzschuh gave their assistance to these students.

Margaret Berger, the nurse, offered such courses as Cardiac Pulmonary Resuscitation, First Aid and Advanced First Aid to the interested students of medicine.

Library renews shelf appeal

Reopening after a year of overhauls, the library continued to run smoothly and make further improvements. Students entering the library found that the staff had interfiled most of the reference sources into the regular shelves. The librarians also moved over 20,000 books to rearrange them in sequential, as opposed to subject, order. The staff planned the completion of an expanded card catalog as its most recent project. The new catalog, completed in November, boasted a less crowded selection of up to date, cross referenced material.

" 'Check-point Charlie' causes too much congestion."

Art Clements, supervisor of the production center, grew "really excited about" the substitution of better video equipment for the A-V room. Video taping became quite popular as teachers arranged for the filming of both their own classes and also television shows that pertained to their areas of study. Production Center aides, either volunteers or recruits from study halls, learned their tasks quickly and upheld the center's reputation for speed and efficiency. Mr. Clements hoped to train several aides to run the new public address system, his latest responsibility, installed in the auditorium.

Tasty variety compensates for crowding

Every day at lunch, South students consumed approximately 68.75 gallons of milk alone, which converts to 260.25 liters for metric buffs. This figure illustrated the tremendous volume of food produced daily by the cafeteria. Due to the initial ban on open lunch, more students remained at school to eat. Condensing the number of lunch periods to three made a noticeable difference in the size of each 25 minute period, some of which contained over 700 students. "They are really packed in here," admitted supervisor Mrs. Swafford, conceding that the increase put greater pressures on custodial and cafeteria staffs to keep up with the demand. Some workers arrived as early as 6 a.m. to begin baking the fresh food sold during the day. In addition to the Type A lunch, the cafeteria also offered the traditional snack bar selections as well as a wide variety of ala carte food. The ala carte choices became by far the biggest business. The vast majority of the student body and faculty found that they could satisfy their cravings for just the right "something" in the school cafeteria.

"The overcrowding burdens the students more than us."

Mini courses for sophomores may discontinue

Mini courses and pupil teacher ratio gave an entirely new perspective to the sophomore English department. Because of the change in a high school environment and new surroundings, the English teachers considered doing away with mini courses for sophomores. This would give the students a chance to become better adjusted to the school. Consequently, for the first time in several years the pupil teacher ratio increased. A larger number of students appeared in all of the sophomore English Classes.

"My theme came back with more red than black ink."

The sophomore teachers also considered the possibility of ordering a new textbook. They felt this change might bring a fresh outlook to their curriculum. It would also allow them to expand the number of topics included in the course in subsequent years.

Faculty strives to standardize English classes

Standardizing their classes became the goal of the junior English teachers. In order to make electives easier for the students, the faculty strove to teach writing in the same manner. Normally when students chose electives for the fourth quarter, the change in teachers caused problems because of the variety of requirements imposed by different teachers.

"We should all have the same chance to learn how to write."

Instead of learning the usual four types of themes, juniors learned how to write only two types of five paragraph themes. Juniors learned how to write a composition about the theme of a particular work and how to write a character analysis. Being taught only these two types of themes enabled students to learn them more thoroughly.

The faculty discussed the possibility of having semester electives or doing away with them entirely. Ideally, each hour would have the opportunity to take a high, medium or low difficulty class with the continuation of the elective course. Teachers tried to gear students into choosing the class that was right for them as far as subject matter.

Seniors endure switch-a-roo

Enormous class loads faced the senior English teachers as the single greatest obstacle during the first quarter. Universal overcrowding prompted the hiring of a new part-time teacher, who helped to equalize student-teacher ratios. Patricia Ann Wareham, the addition to the staff, assumed her teaching responsibilities at the beginning of the second nine weeks. Coming to South from Bishop Miege, Mrs. Wareham found the staff and school much larger, but generally likeable.

"I believe it's worth taking for college prep."

She stated that, "It was fun the way the classes were divided," referring to the fact that students pulled out of various hours then recombined themselves to form her three morning classes.

Seniors in general continued to read classical works such as Hamlet, Antigone and Crime and Punishment in preparation for college English courses. Many took the Advanced Placement exam in the spring in an attempt to quiz out of some or all of their required English hours taken at college.

Language fair displays arts

January began a month of hard work and preparation for the Annual Foreign Language Fair that took place in February. Students in Spanish, French, Latin and German started gathering research for their displays shown at the fair. Maps, sculptures, slide presentations, paintings and sound demonstrations decorated the library for spectators to come and view. As viewers stepped into the fair their attention first became attracted to the gourmet

"There are a million picky things which have to be done."

dishes in the room in front of the check out desk. The fair turned out to be beneficial, not only for those participating, but also for the spectators who came.

Christmas also held a place in the foreign language students stomachs. This is the time of year when the boys fixed all of the food and the girls decorated the room with pictures and ornaments.

Values remain in mathematics

The addition of 12 new hand calculators to the math department especially aided students of applied and refresher math courses. In the department office, the staff sorted and catalogued all available mathematical and theoretical books to provide a handy reference library for both teachers and students. This collection remained the largest of its kind in the district.

"Nothing is more frustrating than component vectors!"

The department resisted making any major changes in its successful program. "Being conservative isn't very exciting," conceded chairman Howard Mischlich. Mischlich and Ray Dennis attended the Regional Convention of the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics at Colorado Springs during the last week in October. There, they shared ideas on current issues and topics with others of their profession. Glenda McDonald planned to attend a similar convention in the spring.

Marine biology draws 120 kids in first semester

The science department offered an entirely new course for those students interested in the field of marine biology. The marine biology class, headed by Mrs. Linda Segebrecht, studied such topics as habitats of marine life, ocean life, oceonography, ocean resources and most important of all, marine ecology. The course's popularity attracted some 120 students. This summer five senior students will travel to San Diego to enjoy the ocean life and come face to face with what they had studied.

"I feel like I'm walking into a mad scientist's lab."

Because of the wide range of science courses open to students, 67 percent of the student body enrolled in some science course, which resulted in one of the highest percentages in the district. To escape from the same old classroom scene, field tech gave students a chance not only to learn about the outdoor life, but to gain the experience of conducting tours through SMESL, informing younger students of the importance of nature.

Panel groups add variation to class routine

Mr. John Seevers' sociology classes decided to change the same old class routine and added a bit of variety to the curriculum. They invited panel groups to come and talk with their classes. After reading passages, one group created a program designed to point out the different age groups and their good and bad points. The experiment proved rewarding to all students.

"The films are an escape from the day to day routine."

The students who enrolled into Mr. Jay Roberson's American history classes found the schedule for the year unique. Mr. Roberson began each quarter with the introduction of a new time period. The students then critiqued the information given to them from lectures, movies and readings. During the whole course of the quarter each student compiled information for research reports. A minimum of two reports from each student ended the quarter with a passing grade.

Parades reveal marching skills

Various activities kept the ROTC unit busy. First year students had the opportunity to attend a week of boot camp at the Great Lakes in April, where they went through basic training. They also learned firefighting and the use of tear gas. On Veteran's Day the marching unit participated in a parade in Kansas City, Mo., where they met with representatives from the Air Force, Army and Navy. The color guard participated in opening and halftime ceremonies at such events as varsity football and basketball games, wrestling and gymnastics meets. The sword arch also participated in the coronation ceremonies at Homecoming and Sweetheart.

"My dad was in the army and I grew up in the spirit of it."

Beginning ROTC students learned marching drills and the proper military method for showing respect for their country, while the more experienced students learned the plotting and maneuvering of ships at sea. Seniors Brent Shaffer and Gene Lamb showed their skill by commanding the ROTC unit for the year.

Girls in P.E. show interest in self defense

Physical education classes participated in a variety of activities enabling students to become exposed to a number of different sports. Girls expressed an interest in fencing, self defense and recreational games with each section lasting two to three weeks. During the course on recreational games, girls had the opportunity to travel to the ice rink and bowling alley to gain some first hand experience in these sports. Boys participated in such sports as football, volleyball and weightlifting, enabling them to develop muscles as well as coordination.

"We teach that girls can be physically fit and feminine."

Junior girls interested in continuing in physical education took the senior leader preparation course in which they learned how to teach skills and officiate athletic events. Girls enrolled in this class also made use of the pond in SMESL where they practiced fly casting. Biking added to the out of doors activities and at the same time enabled students to tone muscles and burn off the ever worrisome excess calories.

Classes added in bookkeeping

Interest in business classes increased especially in the area of bookkeeping. With the addition of one more class in this subject, raising the total number to five, a need arose for another faculty member. Daryl Stephens, who previously taught only typing classes, found himself teaching bookkeeping. Lois Supple, new department head, attributed the increase in enrollment to the relevancy and practicality of the business classes.

"It gives me the experience I need to go into business."

Various changes occurred in the business department. With the retirement of Rhoda Hussey, Lois Supple became department head. DECA and office education classes relocated, DECA moving to room 251 and office ed moving to room 256. Room 263 acquired all electric typewriters.

Home Sweet Home

As enrollment drops, so do class offerings

Declining school enrollment effected the loss of a teacher in the Home Economics Department. With one less teacher, the number of classes had to be decreased also. Only one class of exploring childhood could be offered. So after 61 girls enrolled in the course, Mrs. Linda Plowman, the department head, employed prerequisites for enrollment in the course. At first, she said that students must be seniors, but the problem still remained. She finally cut the class to a minimum by saying that students had to have already taken a child development course.

Last summer, Mrs. Plowman devised a new curriculum for the child development course, which introduced new ideas and learning methods. In the Foods I classes, the added formal dining unit complemented the other dining areas of study by teaching the students how to set a formal table and prepare a holiday meal.

Last year, for the first time in a few years, South acquired a home economics student teacher. Nancy Henke observed the teachers in the classroom and then after a few weeks, taught the classes herself. Miss Henke said her only complaint was "I get asked for hall passes all the time."

Art displays receive boost

An acquisition of three glass display cases came as a welcome addition to the art department. Centered in the long hall outside the art rooms, the display cases provided the space long needed to protect two-dimensional works set up to be viewed by the student body.

"Here, you learn to appreciate the skills you're taught."

Increased interest in picture taking and developing resulted in the enrollment of three larger classes of photography. Instructor Guy Malone enjoyed his eager students, admittedly "very pleased with them." Using the temporary darkroom built by John Jacques, fledgling photographers could develop negatives and print their own pictures. The classes put up weekly rolling shows of their work outside the cafeteria and also provided both black and white and color sections in the spring art show. Malone hoped to initiate some class competition in which prints would be judged by other teachers or administrators. Some students entered various national photo contests offering cash prizes for placement.

Bands carry on old traditions

Dividing instrumental music into three bands enabled students to become more personally involved in the department. The sixth hour band gave students the opportunity to learn fundamental skills on their instruments. It also prepared students to compete for positions in Symphonic and Concert Bands.

"Competition was very intense during tryouts."

Under the direction of President Bob Compton, the officers planned the traditional Christmas party during vacation as well as the Band Banquet which took place in May. As a fundraiser, band members partictipated in the sale and delivery of carnations before every major dance.

Percussionists revived an old tradition by reinstating the Taco Batallion. Drummers composed their own music and highlighted various band concerts with their performances. Their first piece, arranged by Dave Pai, was entitled "66 and 1."

Improv stressed in jazz courses

Members of the music department's two jazz bands spent the year studying and playing this uniquely American form of music and practicing the all-important technique of improvisation. The fifth hour class provided its students with an introduction to jazz and prepared them to audition for a place in select first hour ensemble, which put a greater emphasis on professional techniques.

"Jazz band is the best entertainment in the school."

First hour, the only group to perform regularly, entertained faculty and students by staging lunchroom appearances and playing for homerooms in the auditorium. The annual "Evening of Jazz," however, remained the highlight of the group's performances. Held in the cafeteria on May 13, "Evening of Jazz," incorporated the setting of New York's Central Park in the 1940's. During this four hour presentation of diversified jazz music, members of the band displayed their individual talents through both ensemble work and solo performances.

Changes mean opportunities for orchestra

Opting for a new schedule, the orchestra no longer met in the same old place at the same time. This year, the string sections liberated themselves from the band room and convened for daily rehearsals in the auditorium. Switching the class to the extended fourth hour period allowed the orchestra to utilize the Symphonic Band winds, which joined the group once a week as well as at concerts. Orchestra members coordinated their uniforms with those of all the bands, featuring the same green vests and skirts for the girls, but retained the traditional black suits for the boys.

"We may be a small group, but we have a lot of talent."

South strings kept busy with a series of appearances, beginning with the fall Orchestra and Jazz Band concert. At Vespers, they performed their major piece, the Christmas Concerto Grosso, with featured soloists Dawn Bryars, Leslie Rowland and Karin Hajinian. The Faure Requiem, or Mass for the Dead, comprised the orchestra's primary offering for the classical Masterworks concert in January. On May 8, the orchestra headlined their own concert. Several members of the fourth hour class also devoted much time and effort to the presentation of the spring musical, West Side Story, by playing in the pit orchestra.

Sophs practice with clinician

Concert Choir and other various music groups within the department had the opportunity to work with the prominent music clinician, Dr. Hugh Saunders. Arriving from West Texas State University in January, Dr. Saunders succeeded in improving the singer's tone quality, vowel sounds and breath support. The Concert Choir participated in the Junior High Festival held at South, November 29. Over 250 students from Nallwood Junior High, Indian Creek Junior, Concert Choir, Sophomore Ensemble and Acappella had the chance to listen and compare each others' vocal techniques. Ms. Lerner said that she never heard a sophomore choir this good in the history of South.

"This is the best sophomore choir I have ever heard."

Sophomore Ensemble and Sophomore Treble Ensemble gave those students the experience of singing in a smaller group. Sophomore Ensemble consisted of eight girls and eight boys meeting every Tuesday morning at 7:20. The group sang a variety of madrigals and contemporary music. Sophomore Treble Ensemble, which consisted of 15 girls, met every Thursday morning at 7:20. The students auditioned for the group and were picked for their ability to blend with others. Both groups performed in all school performances and the State Music Contest held in May.

Dembski solos with singers

Choraleers, a mixed choir consisting of students from all three grades, kept a busy performance schedule by participating in every major concert. For the Vespers and Masterworks concerts they combined with the Concert Choir to achieve the professional sound required to perform more difficult works. Gayle Dembski highlighted "Street Corner Spiritual" with a trumpet solo during the Fall Concert. Following the pattern of previous years the Choraleers had an exchange concert with SM Northwest in the spring. The events of the year ended with the Patio Concert.

"Choraleers is a stepping stone for competitive choirs."

Men's Chorus got a late start, beginning in second semester. Males from various choral groups combined to perform with junior high students at The South Area Music Festival. Men's Chorus gave boys the opportunity to participate in an area in which they excel.

Singers receive new garments

If anyone attended a performance by the Chanticleers they found the girls dressed in new robes. The robes came in green and gold with the ensigna SMS across the front. Spectators commented that the robes added a sparkle to the girls' performances. Another new event the Chanticleers had the opportunity to experience occurred November 4 when they sang the Star Spangeled Banner at the Kings Basketball Game. The girls traveled to Kemper Arena expecting just to sing and watch the game. But the majority of the time the girls struggled to get an autograph from the eminent olympic gold medalist Bruce Jenner.

"The warm-ups tire you out for the rest of the day."

February 17, the Chanterelles traveled to Wichita to perform at the Kansas Music Educators Association Convention. The trip included an in-service workshop where the girls performed for music teachers throughout Kansas. The 20 members of the Chanterelles also sang at various functions in the community which included old folks homes and organizational meetings.

Movie night spells success for Acappella

In a unique fund-raising effort, the music department's select 73 member choir sponsored the "Acappella Movie Night" on September 30. Film offerings presented in the auditorium included clips from "Star Wars," "Psycho," and Roadrunner cartoons, followed by the main feature, Neil Simon's "Murder by Death." Admission collected from the student body and families went toward the funding of one of the group's choral highlights, the Spring Tour to a city in the Midwest. In activities closer to home, Acappella perfected complicated arrangements for its performances at the Fall Concert, Vespers and the spring Masterworks.

"Even though he calls us fuds, we're glad D's our director."

Heritage Singers and Varsity Men, elite ensembles of the Acappella Choir, continued their popularity among local community organizations. They kept busy by singing for various groups such as the Optomist and Saratoma clubs throughout the year. Heritage received a special honor as the only Kansas high school choir invited to join seven Missouri groups at an ensemble clinic November 2nd at Hickman Mills. The 28 juniors and seniors also decorated the South cafeteria for the fourth annual Heritage Invitational taking place December 8 and centering around the theme of "An Old Fashioned Christmas."

Word power wins trophies

The debate team proved to be a power team this year. Among their many accomplishments, the debators brought home a trophy every weekend. The squad won many awards including two sweepstakes, outstanding speaker awards and a number of first, second and third place trophies. To raise incentive for improvement within the squad, a debate ladder was set up. This consisted of keeping a weekly list of the squad's top teams. The debators participated in a few out of town tournaments which required them to make an overnight trip. "The overnight was fun," said a student, "but we were really embarrassed when our coach called us over the intercom at the hotel every time she wanted to know our whereabouts."

"Give me the right words and I will move the world"

Forensics, which is also coached by Miss Sandi Gresham, is somewhat related to debate. Both are speaking events on the competative level, however, forensics deals with varied subjects. These include areas like dramatization, duet acting, extemporaneous speaking or even oral interpretation of prose and poetry. The forensics squad also won many awards and trophies. South hosted a debate tournament in the fall and forensics tournament in the spring. Both were large tournaments and were successful, according to Coach Sandi Gresham. A major goal for students was to gain points for the National Forensics League. The objective was working to gain enough points to receive a ruby or a diamond chip set in a pen.

It's only an act

Snider's people make changes

The Theater Department tried some new things this year beginning with the fall play which hosted three directors. Childrens theater production of the Ugly Duckling, directed by senior Mary Jo Redmond, had children come to the Little Theater rather than taking the show to the grade schools as has been done in the past. Thespian officers Dave Bowers, Ben Stephenson, Mary Jo Redmond and Vicki Venturella changed the annual Thespian watermelon feed to attending a dinner theater. The officers also revised the point system for becoming a Thespian so that attaining the title would be more difficult.

"I've learned it's no crime to be myself and it's fun too!"

In addition to the new theater activities at South, students endeavored to further their experience by studying more professional theater. The Broadway road shows performed at the Lyric Theater afforded several students the opportunity to usher and see the productions free, and plans for a week in New York City to see Broadway shows and attend backstage workshops took shape for many theater students.
Mr. Gerald Snider, theater instructor felt that the department reached out to everyone this year. Actors studio class performed for their peers, Childrens Theater appealed to a younger generation, and the sophisticated fall play, Plaza Suite, was on a more adult level.

Journalism Jocks

Patriot staff demonstrates feature style

Originality was the key word in producing an interesting Patriot. To create a well written paper the staff had to study, research and look for interesting news and feature topics. To add to the bi-weekly feature, news and sports articles, six columns that ran every issue were included. Counselors Corner was a review about when the college representatives from various colleges would speak at South. This proved to be helpful to the perspective college bound student looking for an accredited college. A Little Off The Top, a basic humor column, kept students amused by telling about corny television commercials or the hardships of homework. Gigs Gambles forecasted the score of upcoming football games.

"We know who is on the Patriot the day of a deadline."

D Double Coverage forecasted the winter and spring sports events. Drumm Beat, an album review, informed students of the newest releases on the music scene. The last of the new columns, Ask Your Administrator, gave the students the opportunity to question any of the administrators about a controversial issue.

The paper was created by the cooperative effort of the entire staff. Newspaper, which required an hour of class every day, was moved to fourth hour to give the staff more time to write articles, draw layouts and do research. The newspaper informed students about current issues in the community, the state and the nation as well as news in relation to the school.

Heritage staff seeks 'success'

The 1978 Heritage staff spent untold man-hours producing a yearbook revolving around the theme of "success." Considering the winning attitude of both the school and the nation, the journalists deemed it appropriate to center the annual on the accomplishments of South's students and teachers. Several novel design techniques emerged out of the planning of Carla Bogucki, editor-in-chief, and the six section editors. These included layout changes, incorporation of copy into student body pages, an emphasis on quotes and an overall use of graphics.

"Years from now, the book will let us relive high school."

Heavy production demands made the monthly deadlines hectic, but a combination of cooperative staff members and hard working photographers assured the completion of each section. The ultimate reward of seeing the successful finished product kept everyone going during the most trying of times.

NHS puts nose to grindstone

Determined to increase its usefulness as an organization, the National Honor Society channeled its energy into providing services for both the school and the community. Out of its regular meetings beginning in early October sprouted ideas for several projects. Prior to Christmas, NHS sponsored a food and toy drive to benefit needy community residents. Initiating competition among the three grade levels helped to stimulate student interest and boost the collection of goods. No large prize was offered to the winning class, but as NHS member Julie Cusick stated, "People don't have to be rewarded for doing something good."

"We're trying to help other people help themselves."

The society also pledged its aid to the formation of the school's new literary magazine, EPIPHANY, helping to offset initial printing costs. Ideally, the group hoped to contribute something to every area upon which election to the society depends—scholarship, leadership, character and service.

Initiation for the honorary high school journalists' society, Quill and Scroll, took place at South on April 11. Forensics students took part in the program which featured guest speaker Wendall Anschutz. Presented during the ceremony were first, second and third place awards earned through competition in the March 29 Journalism Write-off Contest. In addition, the society awarded the traveling plaque to the district school with the highest number of total points from the contest.

Gifted scholars flaunt honors

Out of its 1978 Senior Class, South boasted ten National Merit Semi-finalists. These winners ranked among the top ½ of one percent of all high school and college students taking the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test last year.

"It all depends on how well you do under pressure."

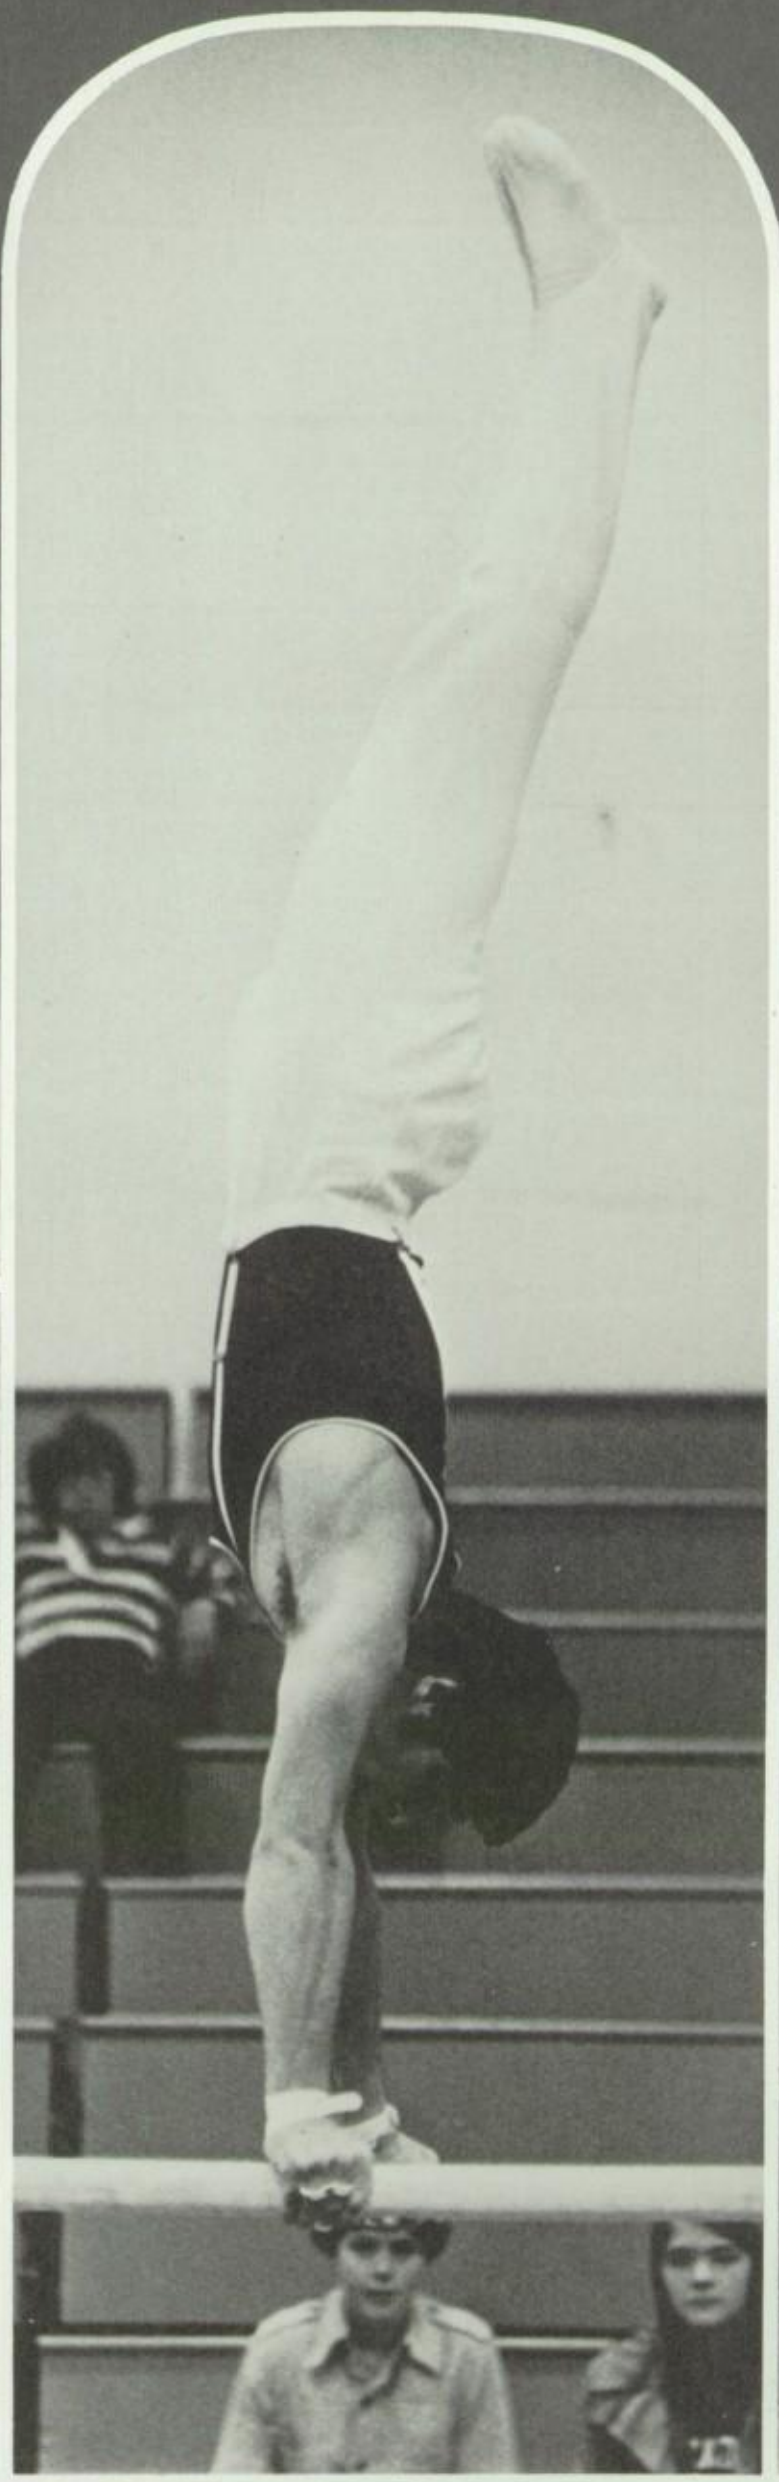
The number of semi-finalists dropped from previous years in correspondence with the reduction in the number of juniors who took the PSAT. Sixteen more seniors received Letters of Commendation, indicating that they scored in the top two percentile, but below the semi-finalists, on the standardized test.

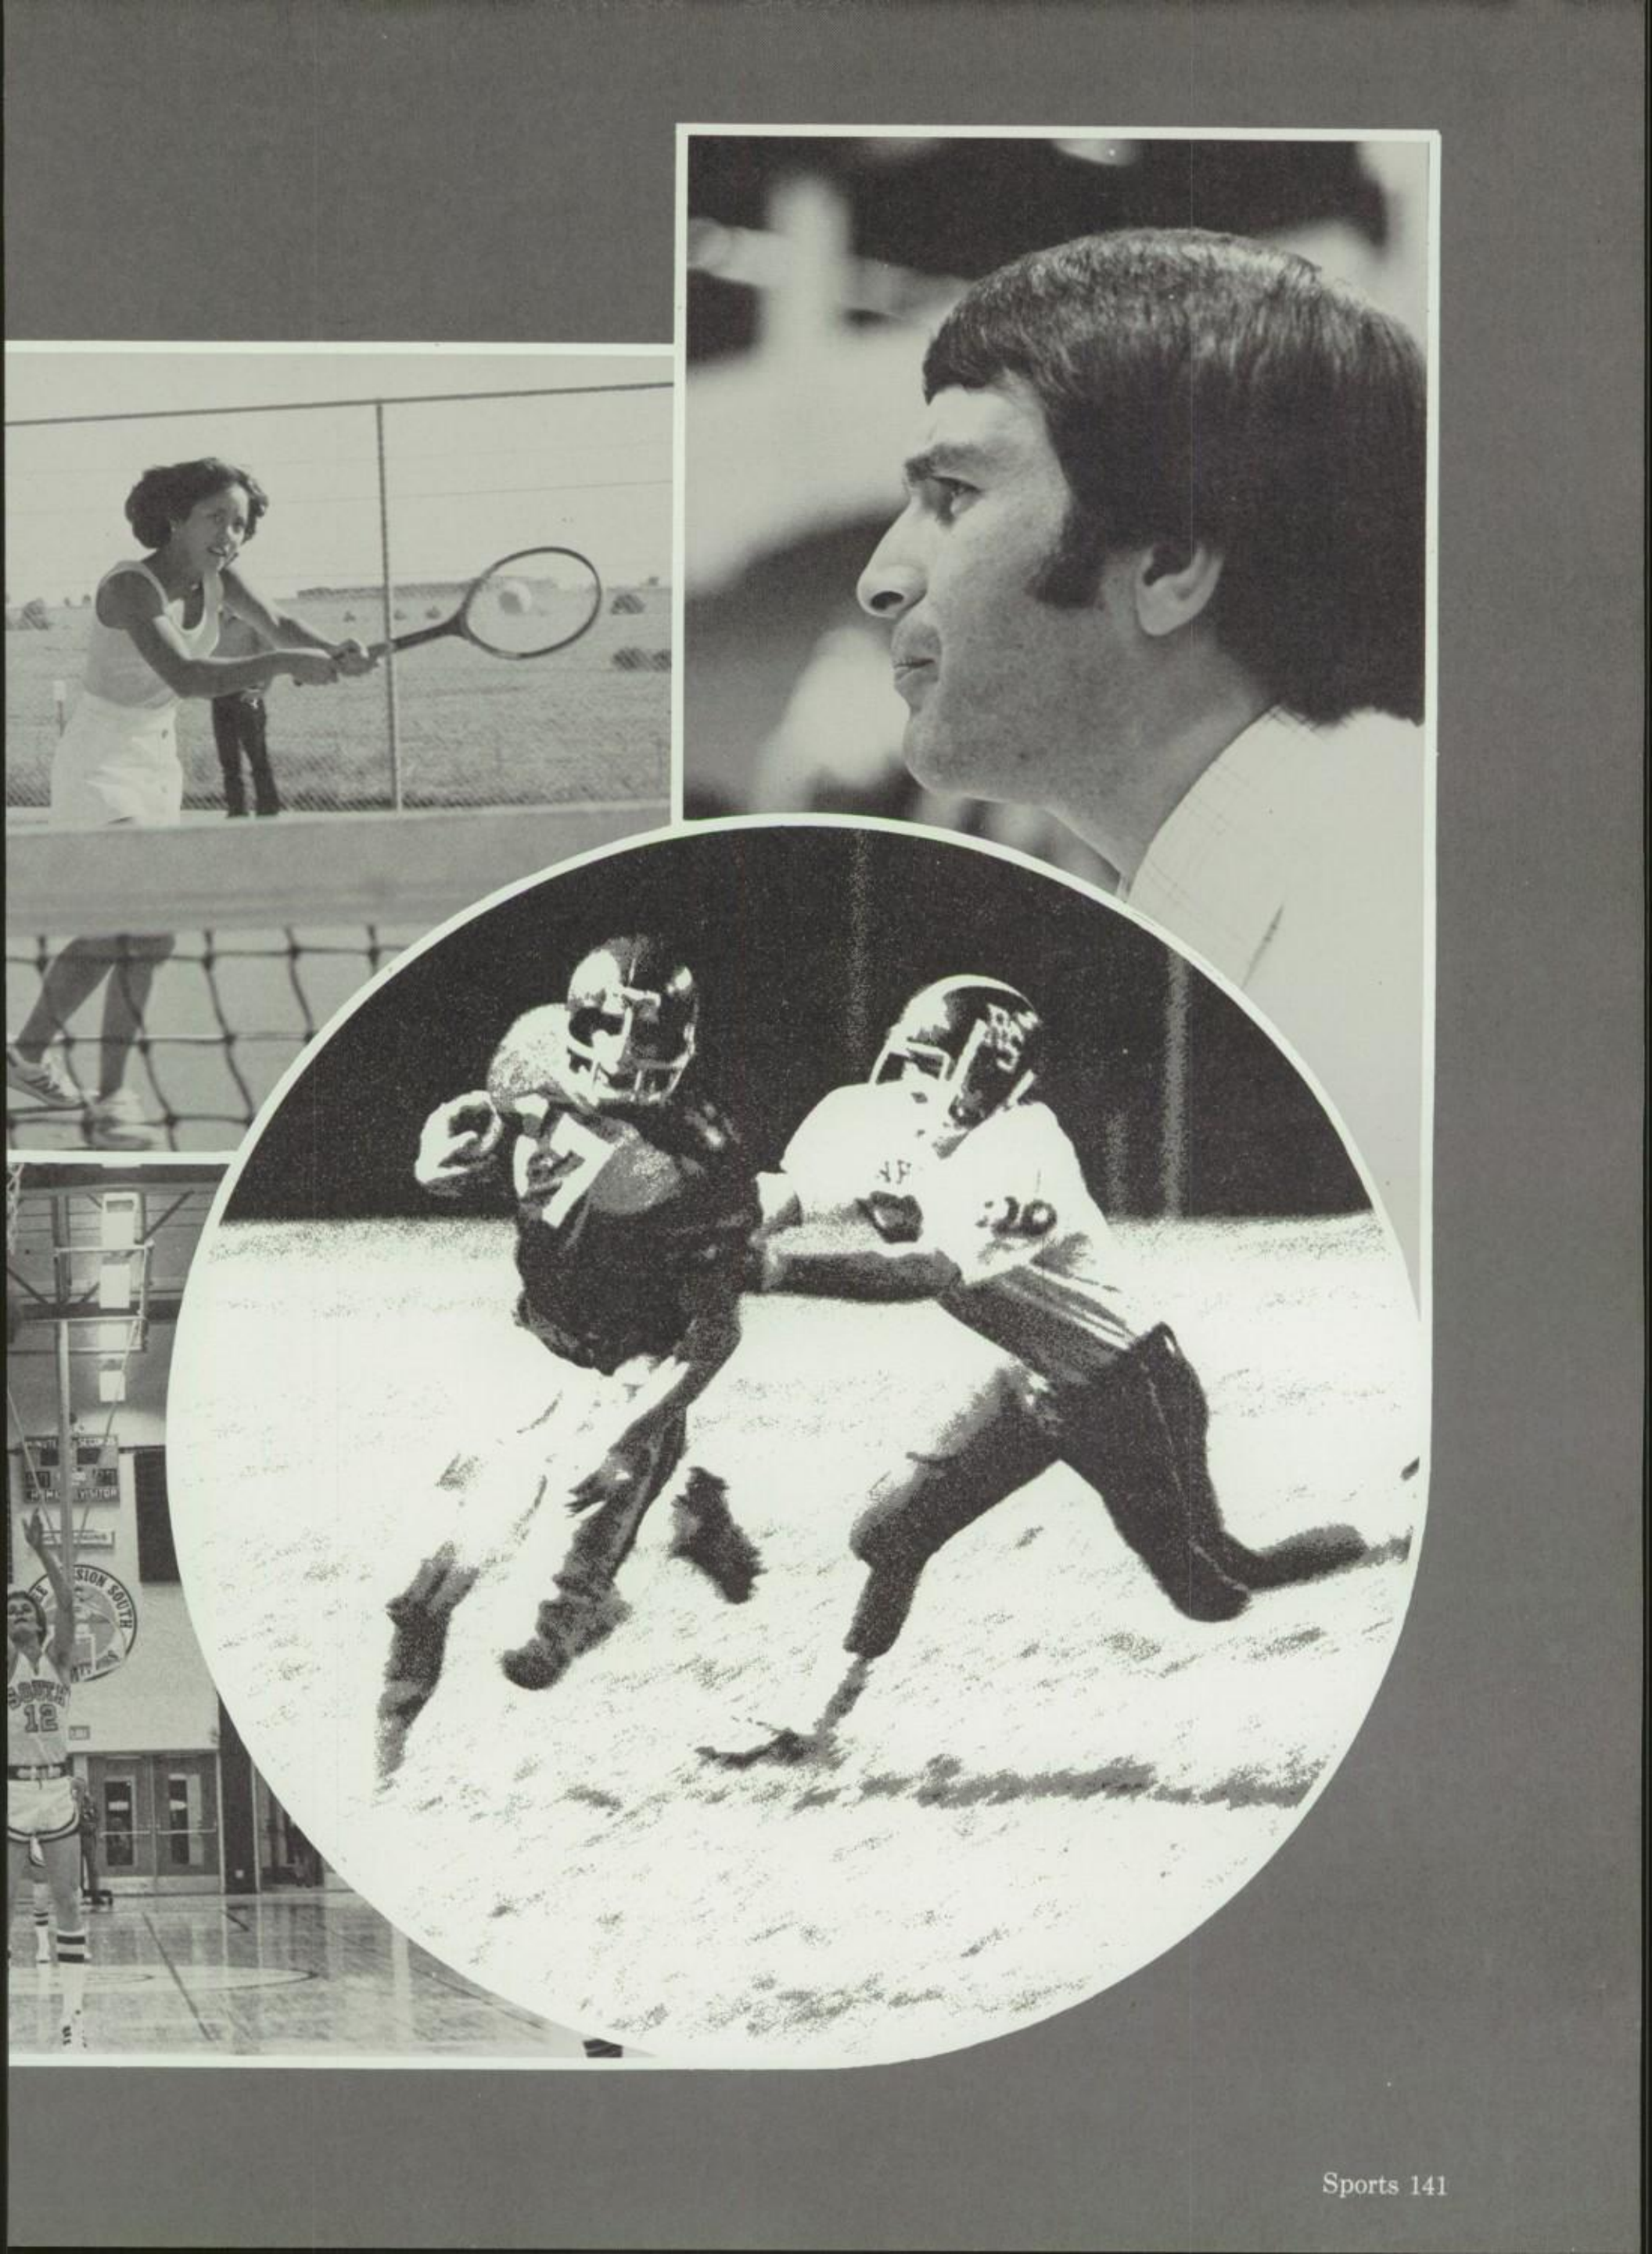
SPORTS

Competition and the drive to be number one completely dominated the sports sector of our high school careers. Although the scoreboard played an important part of how we valued a season's worth, it was not the only thing that measured true success in an athletic endeavor.

Competition with rival schools produced the most exciting contests. We did not always attain the much desired state title, but we held our heads high even during the most agonizing of defeats. We learned that a team could not always win, despite an abundance of talent, without each individual's yearning to do his best. Personal accomplishment in sports was not always scoring the most points, but rather maintaining the ability to finish the race with aching muscles, to rally an optimistic outlook when the team was down, or to obey a demanding coach after several hours of practice.

When the season was over and the team banquet had passed, game scores faded in our minds, but the memory of what made the effort worthwhile lived forever. Some valued their name on the announcements, or the trophy in the front hall, but the true victors were those who remembered the friendships formed by working together as a team. For it was our teammates opinion we valued most; to be an athlete's athlete is the greatest victory of all.





The longest yard

Defense strong on soph teams

The sophomore football teams began their season with only 48 players. With no cuts, each man was needed to give his full effort. In addition to their physical capabilities, the team added an emotional dimension and ended the season not only as a success scorewise, but also as a much more cohesive unit.

Coached by Bill King and Bill Spencer, the sophomore green squad sported a talented group of athletes in both the offensive and defensive departments. Clint Johnson, doubling as both quarterback and punter, averaged 40 yards per boot. Eric Buchanan, run-back artist, starred on the specialty teams by returning three kicks for touchdowns this season.

Split end Lance Stuppy and tailback George Taylor helped spark the Green Team's offensive unit. The defense, led by Brent Steiner, Chris Lattish and Duke Lohr carried the team strongly throughout the season. Lohr also recovered a fumble in the endzone to score the winning touchdown over East.

"Though we had few players, we had a great team effort."

With a somewhat disappointing 2-6 season, Coach King commented, "It was our 7-6 victory against East that proved to me that we could be the good team we knew we were."

The white squad, led by Coaches Bill Stiegemeier and Ken Johns, ended their season with a 4-4 record. With full participation as a keynote, they felt the season an exciting one, with highlights including shut-outs over SM North, Rockhurst and an overtime victory against Lawrence. According to Coach Stiegemeier, "It was the squad's hard work and motivation that developed them into a very representative football team."

JV wraps up strong season

Losing only to Topeka, the junior varsity football team reaped the benefits of long, hard practice. These practices were pivoted for not only junior varsity competition, but also the varsity squad for which 16 juniors contributed their talents.

The junior varsity league champions, coached by Bruce Roach and Mike Welch, utilized an explosive offense to carry them to an 8-1 season record. Backs Bob Rafferty, Todd Parsons and leading rusher Robert Wooten led the offense behind the blocks of linemen Barry Dull, Brian Hanson, Steve Francis, Brook Redd and Dayne Dartez.

Growing stubborn as the season progressed, the defense, led by Tim Parsons, Mike Zimmerman, Matt Lair and Craig Bramscher, allowed few points to its competition.

Overall, both coaches agreed that the team's prevailing optimism throughout the season contributed tremendously to the squad's success.

Raider rally salvages season

The Varsity Football team came perilously close to spoiling South's string of 11 consecutive winning seasons. But Jeff Haun provided a clutch overtime TD and Ron Baellow coolly kicked for the margin of victory, giving South a one point decision over SM East and insuring the Raiders a 5-4 mark. That record, however, did not accurately reflect the team's performance.

"Though I was disappointed with the win-loss record," Head Coach John Davis commented, "I was very happy with their effort." He praised the team for their hard work and dedication. However, they had to labor under the handicap of inexperience, as most of the seniors spent little or no varsity playing time last year. As a result of that inexperience, mistakes plagued the team at crucial times. "If we could recall just 10 plays," Davis observed in hindsight, "we would be 9-0."

The team began the season hungry to redeem themselves for the showing of last year's varsity. At first, it appeared they would do just that. They put together an impressive win over Raytown South, then victimized Topeka in a 41-13 trouncing that marked their best all around performance. But their title hopes faded with heartbreaking defeats to rivals North and West. In both games, the Raiders moved the ball well but missed opportunities that could have easily swung victory Southward. Coach Davis remains encouraged, however, by the prospects for the future as the varsity will return 16 lettermen for next season.

"Look at the bright side, the players are still cute."

Runners build for the future

Thirty-six boys subjected themselves to long practices, unfriendly weather and a hard-driving coach in the hope of becoming part of that unique breed of Raiders - - - the cross country team. They joined a program that has consistently turned out state championship teams. For most of the boys, it marked their first formal exposure to a structured running program.

As always, Coach Verlyn Schmidt emphasized making the season a learning experience in order to build for the future. Seniors Kevin Sullivan, Paul Gorelick and Bill Scott formed the core of the seven-man junior varsity squad. The team consistently recorded top finishes on their way to a second place standing in the Sunflower League. Both the JV and the C-Team enjoyed their best performance at the Northwest Invitational as each team placed second. In the process they defeated a highly touted Lawrence squad. That feat made the meet especially gratifying for it avenged an earlier loss to the Lions.

Schmidt, who noted the harriers' marked improvement over the season, felt encouraged for the future. The team included many sophomores and juniors but only five seniors. Their youth, coupled with a more enthused, positive attitude should provide South with another championship team next year.

Runners master second at state

The Varsity Cross Country Team made their bid for an unprecedented eleventh straight trophy finish at the state meet this year. Working hard on the off-season to build their endurance, they prepared themselves for the tough competition ahead. The graduation of eleven runners last year did not phase the squad as they continued South's traditional domi- of the cross country circuit by taking second at state.

Though Coach Schmidt feels they could have outdistanced SM Northwest to capture the first place trophy, their performance saw three state records fall to the Raiders. It marked their fifth second place finish and their third in as many years. Both accomplishments established state records. It also fulfilled the team's most coveted goal - - - placing in the top three at the state meet a record eleventh consecutive time.

Outstanding individual performances were provided by Steve Smith and Cris Miller. Smith set the course record at state for sophomores. Miller turned in consistently low times and added experience to the squad. Both runners achieved all-state honors for recording two of the top 25 times in the state this year.

Glowing over the success of his team Coach Schmidt offered this note about their unrelenting drive and dedication. "I think it's immoral to lose unless you lose giving 100 percent plus. Because if you do, no one can question it then." The way South has done over the years, there won't be many questions.

Increased effort boosts girls in second year

Coach Verlyn Schmidt cracked his usually stern exterior and smiled. "It was a pleasant coaching experience," he said. "They really surprised me." "They" referred to the members of the Girls Cross Country Team. And their coach had reason to feel pleased. In its second year, the team showed great improvement. Coach Schmidt attributed it to the girls' increased dedication over last year.

"They saw the success of boys cross country," Schmidt noted, "and then took it upon themselves to measure up, too."

The results of the girls' greater efforts quickly became apparent in competition. They placed third in the Sunflower League and then followed up with a fifth place finish at the State meet. That contrasted with the team's less than notable performance last year. And Schmidt suspects that the squad would have fared even better if top female harrier, Jana Muir, had not suffered an injury. They particularly relished their victories over SM East in both league and State, since the Lancers "really walloped" the Raiders a year ago. The girls' performance left Coach Schmidt very satisfied, and gave the team a lot of confidence as they ended the season on a high note.

"The best part was getting to run with the guys."

Underclassmen pioneer netters

Coach Duane Gabrielson, emphasizing seriousness and concentration, was a driving factor in the netters' success. Sophomore Karen Bunag breezed to the state singles crown after going undefeated in inter-school competition during the season. Relying on sophomores and juniors, along with the experienced returning seniors, the squad's only setback was at the hands of perennial powerhouse SM East. Rebounding from the defeat, South went on to later edge the Lancers for the Sunflower League championship. Aside from Karen Bunag, the doubles pair of juniors Chris Copeland and Patty Rowe, Coe Lewis, Cathy Thum, Anne Scott and Susan Koenigsdorf also saw extensive action, eventually combining for a tie with East at league.

Coach Gabrielson, commenting on the girls' achievement at state said, "I talked to the girls about their opposition's weaknesses to build up their confidence."

Girls victorious on league tour

"Consistency," remarked Coach Dick Booth, "is the most important factor." The Girls Golf Team proved him right, as they played very impressive golf this fall. Unlike last year, South hit the links with a more balanced squad that did not boast overwhelming stars, just good, consistent team play. This became their winning formula as the girls made a habit of finishing tournament play in the top three.

The team highlighted its league tour by posting impressive back-to-back victories at Northwest's annual tournament and as hosts of the South Invitational. Sophomore Kelly Erickson, junior Susan Shanks and seniors Jill Brown and Carolyn Jensen took the prize at Northwest, winning in the 4-girl competition. At Brookridge Country Club, senior Joni Blair and junior Brenda Bohne joined the other four to capture the 6-girl title at South's tourney. The girls rounded out the season with an impressive showing at the state tournament.

"That's what encourages me the most. It's improving."

The future looks bright for Raider golf. The team will return its two top players, Kelly Erickson and Susie Shanks. Coach Booth looks for the squad to continue to improve and to become even more competitive. This year's performance should mark the beginning of one more winning tradition at South.

Skills abound on VB teams

Emphasizing teamwork and basic skills, the Varsity Volleyball Team was led through the season by second year Coach Sheri Brosseau. Utilizing the spiking talents of returning letterwoman Susan Sears, Shawn Reaves and Cricket Long, as well as the setting abilities of Captain Linda Hollmann, the team was sparked by early season victories over Topeka, Olathe and S.M. East. Also contributing with starting positions were juniors Peanut Burns, Patti Mings, Patsy Schimmel and Ellen Lansky, whom

"Striving for total teamwork was our main goal this year"

Coach Brosseau believes added much depth to the Varsity squad. Long practice, hours of conditioning, running stadium stairs and volleyball drills helped the Raiders to the semi-finals of the Center Tournament and a strong finish in regional competition at South.

The Junior Varsity team also added their many talents to the overall squad, with their season highlight being a first place victory in the annual Center Invitational Tournament. The team ended their season with a fifth place finish in Sunflower league play.

Under the direction of new Coach Mike Salerno, the two sophomore teams also had a successful season, contributing many talented players to the Junior Varsity team.

Sophomores go with one squad

The Raider basketball program underwent a major overhaul this season. The coming of Coach Paul Sexton to head the Varsity received the most attention, but important changes also occurred on the sophomore level. The two team Green and Gold format was dropped and South took only one sophomore team to the floor this winter. The coaches felt the change would make it easier to cultivate talent for the future.

The team performed better than many people initially expected. With the loss of the top four sophomores to the Varsity and JV, some felt it would be a challenge to break .500. But the team's 15-5 record surprised the doubters and left Coach David Oliver more than satisfied. He praised the team for playing sound, fundamental basketball, and noted that the edge the team had in intensity and enthusiasm became a key factor to their success.

"I think that South spirit had a lot to do with it," Oliver observed.

The squad's depth enabled Coach Oliver to substitute freely without losing any strenth. Oliver found no major differences between last year's program and Coach Sexton's, but did find that the players picked up the new program easier than in previous years. He felt that fact helped their enthusiasm.

"They should provide a nucleus for the JV next year."

"They wanted to play and they enjoyed practicing," the coach said. "I never had to chew them out for lack of desire."

JV plays tough in close games

Although they played bridesmaids to the Varsity, the JV basketball team had an outstanding season. The squad combined fundamentally sound defense with a game-controlling offense. Their cool-headed play in tight situations particularly impressed Coach Bill MacDonald.

"They've learned to play under pressure," he noted, "and have done what I've asked them to do in those situations. Those are the things that win ball games."

South took the court with a relatively small squad as the JV numbered only 10. Among the three sophomores who suited up for the squad was Clint Johnson, a standout at center. "Johnson was a dominating force," commented MacDonald. "He's a real player."

Although the point guard usually provides the team leadership in the type of offense South runs, junior Blake Smith assumed that role from his weak side guard position. He led the Raiders in scoring, averaging over 13 points a game, and he often came through with clutch plays in key situations. Bill Kinney and Larry Hare augmented the team with their pressure defense.

"When we needed somebody shut down, we would tell Hare and Kinney, and they'd do it," MacDonald remarked.

As a unit, the JV made marked improvements in defense, by coordinating their efforts and getting more aggresive weakside help. Coach MacDonald felt that his squad became more assertive and by the latter part of the season began to dominate play.

Sexton coaches winning team

New faces on the court and on the sidelines provided a major force behind the basketball team's big turnaround from one season ago. Sparked by the addition of transfer Steve Sexton, sophomore Tom Payne and the return from injury of Dave Anderson, first year Coach Paul Sexton transformed a 1-19 disaster into the Sunflower League champions. Meshed with returnees Dave Cox, TJ Rasmussen and Dave Richardson, the squad asserted itself early in the season as a force to be reckoned with.

Coach Paul Sexton brought with him a different style of play and a different coaching philosophy than South had been accustomed. Sexton introduced South basketball to a faster-paced, more wide-open offense and a relaxed atmosphere. Players agreed that Sexton's low key approach made the season more enjoyable than past seasons.

Using the Leavenworth game as a springboard, South jumped out to an 8-0 record and fifth place metro rating by the Kansas City Star. The team put these lofty marks on the line January 21 against Wyandotte, perennial basketball powerhouse and then third ranked. Despite a sub-par team performance, South led throughout the game behind the hot hand of Steve Sexton. But the experience and height of Wyandotte eventually wore down South in the last minute, in the Raiders' first defeat, 52-48.

Throughout the season the team played exciting and inspired basketball. As a result, South's basketball pride and tradition was renewed and student interest also saw a rebirth.

Sophs end year on winning note

Aided by team strengths of hustle, ability to work together and good defense, the sophomore girls basketball team ended their season successfully with a 10-7 record. Led by a new coach to South athletics, as well as girls sports, Ken Johns, the team's games were marked by many steals, full court presses and fast paced action. Occasionally, the team was divided into two squads for games, but on the whole, they remained together as one cohesive unit. Commented Coach Johns, "It amazed me how girls from two different schools with a lack of basketball experience came together and worked so well with each other. They really worked hard to improve."

"I was really surprised. Those sophomores really have moves!"

The team depended on total effort by all members as well as high scorer Jane Cowee, who averaged 14 points per game, and leading rebounder Katie Kuehl. Utilizing zone defense, full and half court presses and overall team speed, the squad allowed only five opposing teams over 32 points per game. The team's biggest victory came over Lawrence when the Raiders pulled out a 40-38 come from behind win after being behind at the half 24-10. This type of effort, coupled with the squad's defensive ability and hustle, helped them achieve their ultimate goal of a successfull season.

JV girls record impressive wins

Instigating a new system designed to let each girl know when and how long she would play in a specific game, Coach Howard Mischlich led his Junior Varsity girls basketball team to a successfull season, as well as creating a more relaxed and informal atmosphere during their games. According to Coach Mischlich, this schedule allowed the girls to "schedule their energies," letting each player know her job, when she would be needed to do it and having them not be distracted by looking at the bench all the time, expecting to be pulled out if they made a few mistakes." Coach Mischlich believed this new scheduling system accounted for part of their successfull 11-2 end of season record.

Also contributing to the JV's victorious year were high scorers Deedy Conard and Ellen Lansky and leading rebounders Conard and Nancy Kelly. With the team's only losses coming at the hands of Lawrence and SM North, Coach Mischlich pointed out that his team's average margin of victory was 13 points per win.

"The record proves the skill and talent that is moving up."

The Junior Varsity girls were often pulled up to the Varsity ranks, with usually five players moving up for those games. With so many girls returning next year with talent and Varsity playing experience, the coaches look forward to a successfull season.

Varsity suffers trying season

Plagued with a lack of returning Varsity-experienced players and inability to successfully execute fundamentals of the game, the girls Varsity Basketball team endured one of its longest and most trying seasons. With only one victory, against Westport, stacked against 17 losses, the squad doggedly continued throughout the season, losing close games that, according to Coach Ron Millard, "could have gone either way, but just didn't go ours," including a sixth place finish in the South Invitational Tournament.

The sole returning Varsity starter from the previous year, forward Debbie Disch, served as team captain as well as leading rebounder. Though no player averaged in double figures in that department, Disch managed nine per game, followed by juniors Sue Kelly and

"They really try hard; too bad nobody appreciates them."

Cindy Kraft with seven rebounds each. High scorer for the Raiders was junior Patti Mings, averaging 10 points per game, with the team also relying on inside shooting from Disch and top of the post shots from senior Cricket Long.

Commented Coach Millard, "One thing the girls didn't lack was desire. They worked hard and continually tried to improve." The team practiced each day from 2:00 to 4:00, a reduction in practice time from previous years. Coach Millard, as well as team members, were still positive about the season in many ways, and with Varsity players returning next year, prospects are bright for a successfull and still hard-working team.

Grapplers close to state title

Highlighted by a third place finish in the state tournament including four finalists, the wrestling teams experienced a successful season. South's only conference dual loss was at the hands of the defending state champions, SM West.

Scott Luschen won his third consecutive state title, becoming the first wrestler in eastern Kansas history to accomplish this feat. Luschen's 22-0 season record, including Sunflower League and regional crowns, qualified him for the United States All Star Team.

Although the team lacked depth in the lower weight classes, they were strong in the middle and upper weights, utilizing an even balance of juniors and seniors. League champion Jim Gaughn, Brian Dicker, Mike Middleton, Todd Cotter, regional champions Jon McGuire and Luschen, along with juniors Dan Middleton, Kirk Miller and Marc Jaben were consistent winners throughout the year.

Early practices help swimmers

Led by a strong nucleus of three seniors and three juniors, the boys swimming and diving team endured a busy and competitive season. The Raiders began practicing in the beginning of November for a grueling three months of invitationals and duals.

One of the high points of the year was a second place finish in the Raytown South Meet of Champions when the Raiders outpointed the SM East Lancers. East, however, defeated South for the first place title in the Sunflower League meet at SM Northwest later in the season.

"Even though practices hurt, they helped us get to state."

The 200 yard medley relay team of John Ripley (butterfly), Dave Whitmore (backstroke), Dick Hansen (breastroke) and Pat Boppart (freestyle) shattered the school mark with a time of 1:44.0 in the league meet and proved to be one of the best squads in the area.

Whitmore and Ripley performed well in the 100 yard backstroke and individual medley, while defending 50 yard freestyle state champion Boppart, three year letterman Dave Ball and John Pemberton formed the freestyle contingent. Hansen joined Ball in the 100 yard breastroke at the state meet, and Steve Honan established himself as the squad's best diver.

The Raiders psyched themselves up for their second place finish in the state meet at Kansas State by growing beards which they shaved prior to the competition. The Raiders upset the defending state champions, Wichita Southeast for runner up honors to SM East.

Gymnasts soar to fourth title

The Boys Gymnastics Team could do little wrong as they totally dominated their competition all season. And their performance in the state meet left no doubt about who resided at the top in Kansas gymnastics. By the time the final scores were tallied, South had shattered the state team record and emerged as champions for the fourth consecutive year.

Led by state all-around champion Greg Randall, the team built an awesome reputation among its competitors. The gymnasts dominated so consistently that Coach John Brouillette called the season an "almost boring" experience. Because of their motivation, hard work and superior talent, he did not feel his coaching abilities were taxed at all.

By far the team's best performance came at the state meet. The gymnasts completed 23 of 24 routines without a major break—an amazing accomplishment for a high school squad. The entire team responded to their coach's challenge to break the 150 point barrier. Their 154.85 total not only bettered the old state mark, but it also ranked as the sixth best high school gymnastics performance in the nation this year. Greg

"Not that I'm ignorant, but what the heck is a P-bar set?"

Randall assured himself a second straight all-around title by breaking his own state record for the sixth time with a phenomenal 52.2 out of a possible 60 points.

Asked to sum up his feelings, Coach Brouillette reflected, "I don't know if I'll ever be lucky enough to coach another team as good as this one." Then, almost sadly, he added, "It may be a once in a lifetime thing."

Gymnasts take 2nd at state

Directed by Coach Billie Rice, the Girls Gymnastics team started slowly in their pre-season practices, but as the season began, the squad moved into top contention in the league. Highlighting their season by defeating SM North in a dual meet, as well as capturing first place in the Junior Varsity league meet, the girls ended their season with a second place finish in the State tournament held at South.

Coach Rice commented that, "the entire team consisted of good hard workers," practicing every day after school for three hours. This effort paid off, with the Varsity Team suffering only one defeat in dual competition and taking second place at the league meet. At the State tournament, the girls reached their goal of beating nemesis SM North, a victory which Coach Rice attributed to her team's determination.

"Our team is very coachable and a tight, close-knit group."

Led by co-captains Beth Wilcher and Lisa Sato, the team depended upon the consistent talents of Laurie Desmarteau on the balance beam and uneven bars, Anne Robinson's floor exercise, all-around gymnast Kelly McKessor and the entire vaulting squad of Marienne Galamba, Beth Wilcher and Marsha and Kelly McKessor. Despite mid-season injuries to Jenny Randall and Stacey Varner, who both suffered dislocated elbows, the team continued undaunted throughout their successful season.

1. Mark Gruver comes up empty as Scott Taylor strips him of the ball in a contest between The Force and Unit Twisters, two powerful senior division teams. 2. Dennis Butler, assistant sponsor to Tim Burkindine, keeps score during one of the many weeknight intramural battles. 3. Todd Parsons swoops down after picking the boards clean. 4. Members of the I.O. Ticmes race down to witness the hatchet job performed on teammate Greg Brown. 5. Mike Coons, one of the many students who officiated at intramural basketball games, focuses on the action. 6. Despite the intense competition of most games, students have fun as Jim Adams hams it up with an "assisted" dunk.

Students gun for pride, fun

Over 150 students donned their sweatsocks and brushed up on their jumps-shots as the intramural basketball program attracted tradtionally enthusiastic participation. The program gave sports-minded students who could not meet varsity standards an opportunity to play ball.

Modifications in the format for scheduling promoted more balanced competition. By dividing the teams into sophomore, junior and senior leagues, Coach Tim Burkindine hoped to prevent some of the lopsided contests that have occurred in the past. Despite the change, victory margins occasionally swelled to as much as 90 points. As a whole, however, the leagues became more competitive.

"Some guys take it as seriously as the NBA playoffs."

"Last year we had only a few really good teams," Coach Burkindine recalled, "but this year we had seven or eight teams that have beaten each other, and they're all good."

Team names ranged from the bizzarre abstractions to media-inspired gems. Names such as Tecate and I.O. Ticmes exemplified two of the strangest team titles. Several girls' teams chose names in the same vein as TV's "Charlie's Angels" with appellations such as Doc's Jocks and Donald's Ducks.

The intramural program also received the services of its first official statistician. Bill Hill, an intramural fanatic, kept teams and individuals up to date on their scoring exploits and league standing. The season concluded with the annual tournament in March.

STUDENT BODY

The success of a school depends greatly upon its student body. We as students at South attempted to live up to the school's winning reputation. As incoming sophomores, we struggled to learn what was expected of us, adjusting ourselves to new rules and routines. As juniors, we became more comfortable with our situation and could then concentrate on our individual interests. Finally, as triumphant seniors, we assumed a position of leadership while enjoying our last year of high school. Many of us spent hours on end working diligently to improve our skills. We strove for excellence, and with the advice of teachers, coaches and advisors, our enthusiasm paid off.

Some of us looked barely beyond the ultimate goal of graduation. Others of us were determined to make the most of our high school years by constantly aiming toward the future and applying the lessons we learned to realities in the outside world. By reviewing our achievements along with our downfalls, we were able to evaluate the performance of not only our individual selves, but also of our student body as a whole. Success in high school did not automatically bring success in life. It did, however, give rise to a sense of self-worth which contributed to our potential prosperity.

Officers reward obliging Sophs

To promote the paying of dues, the four sophomore class officers offered a reward to anyone who handed over their $2. President Dena Donaldson distressingly said in late November, "We ordered 'class of '80' buttons to give out after they paid their dues, but they're two months late in coming, so we haven't collected any dues yet."

Tube attracts kids' attention

Have you ever stopped to realize how much time you have spent in front of the tube in a week's time? Estimations show the average student spends about three hours after school and about two more hours at night before the screen. This gives you a grand total of 35 hours a week which could have been spent doing anything from going out to slaving over homework. But who could venture home after seven hours at school and begin doing work again? Very few, of course. So, the T.V. seems like the most relaxing thing to do.

1. Lisa Godfrey fixes her attention to the tube while watching Starsky and Hutch. 2. A mother sits back, watches President Jimmy Carter and crochets while waiting for the kids.

Movie theaters attract daters

At $3 a ticket and perhaps $5 for a bite to eat afterwards, movie dates remained popular among those with moderate income. Other inexpensive ways to spend an evening with a "friend" were watching TV and crashing parties. TV proved burdensome, especially if the entire family, including the dog, sat munching on caramel corn as you and your date tried to carry on a conversation. Parties were scarce, so theater owners prospered. Star Wars, Oh God and Heroes topped the list of favorite movies.

1. A crowd gathers at Ranchmart Theater to wait for tickets to OH GOD! 2. CLOSE ENCOUNTERS draws large crowds in December.

Cheaters plot ways to get by

Some students continued to rely on cheating in order to achieve passing grades. People utilized various methods to fool their teachers and themselves. Inventive and experienced cheaters devised elaborate crib notes and ingenious ways of retrieving them. Honesty among students was sometimes questionable.

1. Beth Meltzer looks over Liz Kessler, demonstrating the most common way to cheat. 2. Wendy Godfrey demonstrates the note method of passing exams.

Excess eating causes bulges

At this time everyone drop what your doing and go stand in front of a mirror. Most likely you probably see bulges and bulges of fat. Well, you can do something about this. Stop eating so much junk food, mainly because, it gives you zits, wastes money, and has you in the bathroom all day with a stomach ache.

Snowy slopes draw students

Speeding down snow covered slopes on skis is one of the favorite winter pastimes for students. Over Christmas vacation students headed for the mountains on YMCA trips, family vacations or just with a group of friends. Jim Benson, Jeff Haun and Dave Williams organized a trip to Winter Park, Colorado during the Christmas vacation. Forty people signed up to take part in the five day ski excursion. Aside from the usual ski lodge partying, other activities included entering amateur downhill races and tubing, which is sledding on innertubes.

1. Liz Kingsbury and Dave Williams admire each others' ski wear. 2. Jeff Haun readies himself for Christmas vacation on the slopes by choosing his boots and skis from Sitzmark at Indian Creek.

Graffiti angers custodial crew

Whether a way to release tensions or for the sheer fun of it, students made their mark on school property. Graffiti became evident on desks and walls with pencils as the number one marring instrument. Students exhibited their originality with anything from "Joe Blow was here" to elaborate artistic endeavors. Marring of the walls particularly aggravated the custodial crew.

1. Students express their hostilities on school walls. 2. Some girls choose to publicize their romances.

KC plays host to big concerts

If the interior of Kemper Arena or Tiger's Records was more familiar to you than that of your own home, you were probably an ecstatic music fan this year as Kansas City became an important entertainment market, hosting many big-name concerts such as Yes, Linda Ronstadt, Fleetwood Mac, Kiss and the ever-popular Kansas and Styx. The concert goer endured many hardships, including blasted eardrums and crushing in the riotous mobs, yet it all proved worthwhile in an evening of music, fun and the various other forms of entertainment that are synonomous with the rock concert.

1. "Point of Know Return" by Kansas. 2. "Kiss Alive II." 3. South seniors Teresa Rogers and Mike Woods browse at Tiger's.

Hot rod cars cause problems

The school parking lot has status for a number of things. It serves as a strip for drag racing, a practice road for new drivers, a place to show off a new souped up hot rod and a place for students to smoke cigarettes before and after school. The crowded conditions in the parking lot add to the many accidents that occur there. Drivers in a peer setting are adept at driving recklessly and showing off.

1. Mr. Tiegreen supervises towing of car from illegal space. 2. Snow causes problems for drivers. 3. Drivers wait to leave school.

High School love; never or forever

Dating styles have changed somewhat, but the traditional "boy ask girl" still reigned a favorite with today's teens. What is done on a date, how much it costs and curfews or the absence of, affected social activities.

Couples no longer "went steady", they "dated", and true love and life together was their destiny until of course the next month when they broke up, only to find another partner with whom to share their affections.

Popular date activities included concerts, movies, professional and school athletic events.

1. David Drumm and date wait in line to buy movie tickets. 2. A common sight on a weekend night, couples sit close together despite driving hindrance. 3. Deena Corn and Gene Lamb dance closely at Homecoming.

Help wanted: male or female

With the development of the Equal Rights Amendment, both sexes now have the chance to demonstrate their abilities in areas other than those in which they are stereotyped. Women enjoy being garage men and truck drivers as much as men like being stewards for airlines and nurses in hospitals. Even the job of homemaking provides a challenge for either of the two sexes.

1. Grocery stores provide equal opportunities for girls by hiring them as carry outs. 2. A full fledged gas pumper fills the tank for 65¢ a gallon.

Tait anticipates successful Prom

The Junior Class officers began Prom preparations in the spring of '77 and completed plans by late October.

At a StuCo Exec meeting, Dana Tait, president, explained, "Prom is going to be very special this year. We've worked really hard, and we have permission to have Prom at Plaza Inn." Later these plans were presented at a junior-senior class meeting.

Senior Leaders assist teachers

According to one physical education instructor, the Senior Leaders "are the teachers when we aren't around." Combining skills in athletics as well as responsibility, those chosen from the many Senior Leader Prep class applicants must face a true challenge: a 30 member sophomore gym class. But for those who can take it, the experience proved to be a fun and enjoyable one that will never be forgotten.

Money raising causes spending

Approximately 20 groups and organizations had some sort of money making projects throughout the year. After the school fees which came to approximately $75,350, students paid for organizational dues, uniforms, art supplies and lunch. Students also helped to support different groups and their activities by buying an assortment of items. With all the money accumulated from fees and profit making projects it seemed there should be enough money for all. On the contrary, most groups had only a small sum, if any money left for next year' group.

1. The art department keeps a record of those who use materials by charge cards. 2. Joni Blair searches for change to sell Leo Lund a South hat. 3. Butterfingers and Turtles bring in money for several groups.

Mopeds provide riding pleasure

Mopeds, a combination motorcycle-bicycle, swept through the Midwest in the fall. Originating in Europe, the moped made its debut on the East Coast approximately two years ago. An answer to the energy crisis, the moped can travel 35 mph and gets about 150 miles to the gallon. New shops and various sporting goods stores stocked them.

1. Two sophomores try out mopeds at Mopeds, LTD., located at Indian Creek Shopping Center. 2. Brad Becker and Scott Lauder check the price.

Teen freedom dilates 'the gap'

Over the years, "the gap" has increased tremendously, until today it's almost busting at the seams. Participants for the dinner hour and family outings dwindle with each passing day. The reason: teenage independence. Friends become problem solvers, instead of parents, and a boss at work provides spending money which replaces the weekly allowance given at home.

Weekends spent partying by all

Every Monday it never fails, "Did you have a good weekend?" What makes a "good weekend"? Some people considered indulging in beer, on their own or at an 18 (3.2) bar, a good time. On beerless weekends, some bars offered disco dancing after 12:30 a.m. to minors. Still others found refuge at various hangouts, i.e. 7-Eleven or McDonalds. The phenomenon of dating became the exception rather than the rule. One commonly found a carload of the same sex cruising about town on a weekend night.

1. Scott Carpenter and Ann Johnson rap about her party's events. 2. The Kings game offers an exciting time for a weekend night. 3. Senior Steve Malcy stocks up for the evening.

Discos serve entertainment

The rage of the discos has changed the teenage weekend. Disco owners reaped profit as kids stood in long lines to be admitted. Once inside, the smoke filled rooms presented a variety of characters. Many folk came west to enjoy the 18 Kansas law. When patrons weren't 18, fake ID's flooded wallets.

At times it became so crowded, that trying to walk across the floor resembled bumper to bumper traffic. The explosion of popularity continues. Malt shop merchants eat your hearts out.

TEST 3: SOCIAL STUDIES READING

DIRECTIONS: The Social Studies Reading Test measures your ability to comprehend, analyze, and evaluate reading materials in such social studies fields as history, political science, economics, sociology, anthropology, and psychology. To answer these questions, you will have to draw on your background in social studies as well as on your ability to understand new material. In

1. According to the Seniors make college choices

"What were your test scores?" became a common question as seniors began preparing to enter college. Students debated whether to take the SAT, ACT or both, basing their decision upon which scores would be accepted by the particular college to which they were applying. Pressure intensified as the year progressed and application deadlines approached. Cost, size and location played an important part in deciding on a college.

Park patronage remains high

The park continued to fulfill its traditional function as a recreation center for a number of students. Despite its outdoor setting, the park's everpresent haze and conglomeration of cigarette butts, beer cans and empty bowls did little to remind students of Yellowstone. Though not officially condoned, the park served as Raiderland's answer to the SM East smoking lounge. Some devout parkgoers could even be seen braving the elements to indulge in their favorite smoke and/or toke before rushing in the building to class.

1. Students demonstrate that life in the park does not necessarily mean all smoke and no play. 2. Hastily discarded matches and cigarette butts litter the park. 3. Although deserted in the winter, many students regard this as their "stairway to heaven."

Seniors yearn for graduation

The epidemic hit early this year, and students at South suffered from particularly severe cases of the dreaded disease. As the most virulent form of spring fever, Senioritis has become the number one cause of G.P.A. failure. The symptoms started with the painting of a huge "78" on the front drive. Other telltale signs included the mysterious appearance of an ORI on the roof before a football game and the equally mysterious non-appearance of tires stacked on the roof and adorned with "Seniors '78." The epidemic became even more critical after the annual senior trek to Padre Island.

1. An array of beer cans, calling cards of senior pranksters, greets the morning traffic. 2. Candy Peterson experiences one of the more bizarre symptoms of Senioritis.

Vandals strike in night raids

Competition between area high schools remained strong, especially during sports seasons. Because of its location on the edge of town, South became a prime target for interschool vandalism. Tepeeing, soaping walls and littering became favorite ways of leaving messages predicting a victory or defeat. The final outcome, however, was always determined on the court or field.

1. Nine seniors display their school spirit with a unique "Kick North" sign. 2. Tepee jobs require time-consuming cleanup.

Officers boost school morale

Elected through clever campaign endeavors, the senior class officers began their duties in the spring of '77. The main goal of the officers was to promote school spirit among their peers. Under the leadership of Mimi Parks, the senior officers sold T-Shirts as both a fund raiser and a spirit booster. The officers also planned the Prom after-party.

Football 2,3,4; Letter 4; DECA 3; Buchwackers 4; Who's Who Among American High School Students 3. As I look back on my high school days I will remember sports, the parties and most importantly my friends. If there is a lesson to be learned from these past years, let it be one of growing up, of setting goals and then trying to attain them. But now look forward, our greatest challenges are ahead of us. Good luck to the Class of '78. DH, JH, BC, DK, MB, TL — Thanks for being the friends you were. JC, Thanks for everything you did. To all my friends — be good, and if you can't be good, be careful.

Well, I thought and thought about this verbal legacy and here it is an hour before the deadline and my page is still empty. I wanted to write something that would be amusing, but also that I could look back upon when I'm rich and famous and not wince. I guess I'd better leave it at a "thank-you" to friends John, Pat and Ben for all those good times. A friend is the one who is always there when we need someone to share our feelings. If it is a time of joy, a friend can increase our happiness many times over. If it is a time of sadness, a friend can help us feel better by listening, by understanding, by simply being near to us with a few words of comfort. Friends know practically everything about us . . . but they like us anyway. They not only care for us, for our virtues; they love us in spite of our faults. This knowledge gives us the freedom to really be ourselves when we are with a friend. (thank you) —Walley

If a man has a talent and cannot use it, he has failed. If he has a talent and only uses half of it, then he partly failed. If he has a talent and learns somehow to use all of it, he has gloriously succeeded, and won a satisfaction and a triumph few men ever knew. —Thomas Wolfe. For many years, I have been genuinely interested in the paradox of declining health among Americans. This situation is clearly a paradox when one considers our prosperity, advanced technology and sophisticated health care system. What has been overlooked is the importance of adhering to the laws of nature in our nutritional intake as the absence of good nutrition is the underlying cause of poor health. While many people will concede that they are aware of these realities, only a conscientious few will live by them.

When I first came to South I knew nothing about cars. Then I met Frank Palmer, Mike Murdock and Ron Curtis. These people made me what I am right now, a true racing mechanic. I used to think Mopar ruled but after only three years at South MM, BW, GT, and JG helped me see the light. Small Black Chevies rule, Hemis are junk, it's as simple as that.

Friends, we will always be, whether in fair or in dark stormy weather. When there's nowhere else inside ourselves to grow, do we dream away. Friend, come run with me through fields of faith. Don't fear the darkness, don't fear the changes, for the light is still the same. God, in His infinite mercy, created parents to help us touch the dreams we see. A friend is the sharer of our dreams. Yet if you will it, it is no dream. Today is the best day of my life. And when tomorrow comes it too will be the best.

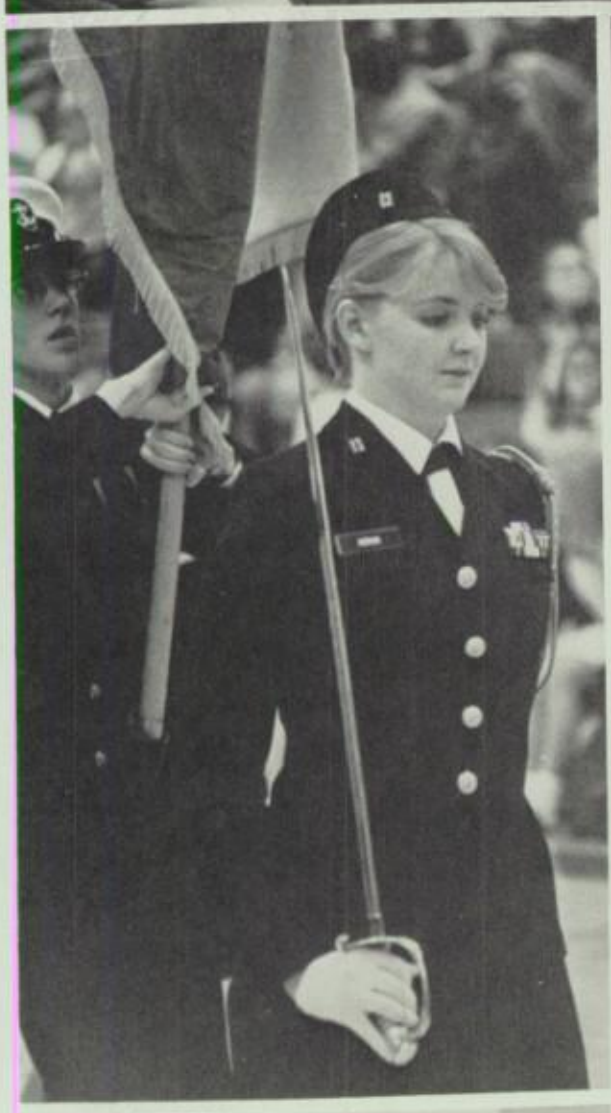
PSYCHOLOGY



ADS-INDEX

From the general store, to the small town, to the large metropolitan areas with shopping centers, our country has evidenced tremendous growth over its few centuries of existence. Advertising played a key role in the progress of the country as well as in the progress of technology. Good advertising encouraged competitors to build better products, providing advantages over the model currently advertised. From luxuries to necessities, advertising provided a way to interest the public. As technology improved, so did products. This resulted in more and better quality advertising.

Advertising is found in many forms. It appears on huge billboards and during television commercials. Although it is difficult for product manufacturers to determine the best form of advertising, such printed materials as newspapers, magazines and catalogs are very popular. In whatever form, advertising is an art. It must have sales appeal. Progress is necessary in advertising as in any successful business. Improved product technology and improved advertising technology go hand in hand.

Old days, good times I remember.
Fun days, filled with simple pleasures.

All kinds of movies, pizza parlors, and blue jeans, partying, football, basketball and baseball games, and never forget the birthdays(kidnappings). These and so many more things take me back to a world gone away.
Memories—seem like yesterday . . . . . .

Old days, good times I remember.
Gold days, days I'll always treasure.
Happy faces, full of love and laughter, funny places, many late nights and cruisin' cars, take me back to a world gone away.

Old days, on my mind and in my heart to stay.
Old days, darkened dreams of good times gone away.
Old days, days of love and feeling fancy free.
Old days, days of magic still close to me.

Old days, Gold days, Fun days, Happy days, and very unforgettable days.
Friends make life worth living, I know it's so true cuz no one ever had dearer friends than u.

I'm so glad we had this time together . . . . . .

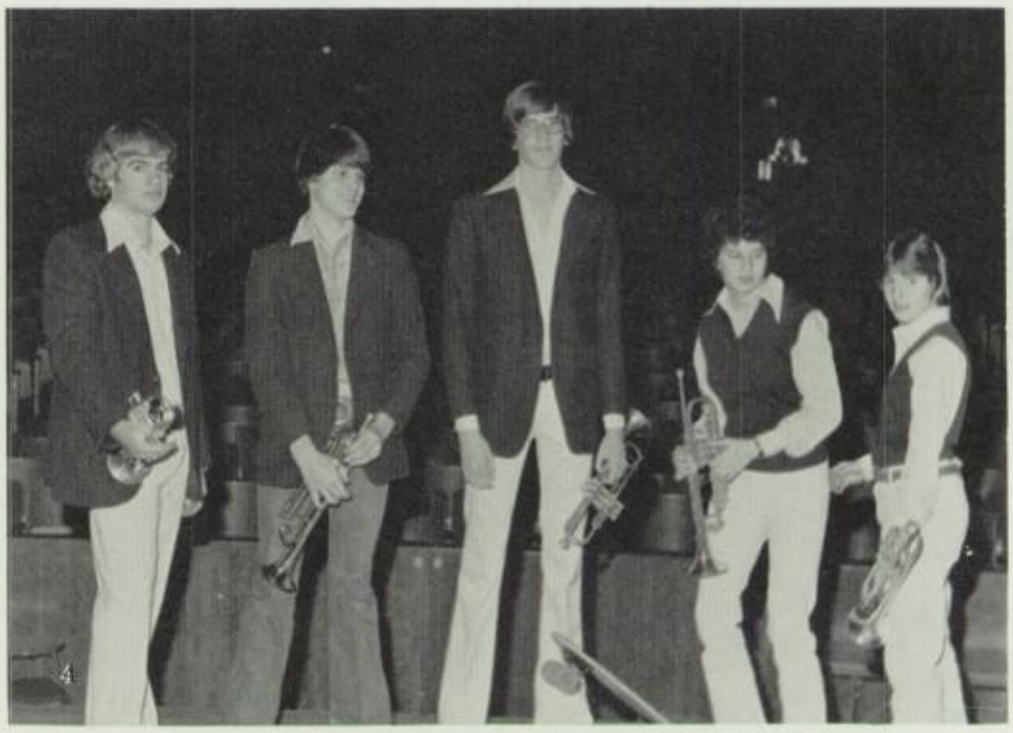
GREEN PEP BAND

The Green Pep Band, (sometimes referred to as the Green Pep Band) is highly acclaimed throughout the district as the top pep band of S.M.S. Composed of twenty excellent musicians, this group was the only pep band of South for many years. When the Gold Pep Band was added in 1976, the Green Pep Band was freed of performances other than home football and basketball games, state wrestling, Big 8, NAIA, etc. As an added courtesy to the school, pep rallies are performed weekly in the interest of higher spirits. Rehearsing week days at 7 A.M., the group is ready at a minutes notice to man the bandstands and defend the students from boredom. When asked if this years band is as musically talented as well as polite, interesting, co-operative and original as past years bands, President Bob Compton intelligently replied, "No Comment". Considering that these students perform for absolutely no academic credit and very little recognition, the Green Pep Band is truly amazing.



1. The body of the band could not survive without the shadows of the rhythm section. Dan "Taco" Torchia, Dave "Mad Korean" Pai, Craig "Breezin" Brannin, "Big Bob" Merdian (not pictured). 2. "Low brass gots class." Steve Adams, John Hatcher, Jim Martin, Bill Hogue, Dave Strong, Bill Reigel (not pictured). 3. Tenor Saxes lay (back) their lives on the line while warding off bystanders at a Pep Rally. Marion "Super Hoog" Straten, Paul "Rip off" Bastin, Andy "Android" Hite, Barry "Manilow" Galiger. 4. Trumpets, "We don't get no respect!" Bob "Tumbles" Compton, Dave "Squealer" Wheeler, Jim "Radical" Doull, Jody "Short Stuff" Colburn, Gayle "Starsky" Dempski, Blake "Dropsies" Smith (not pictured).

S.M.S. SOUTHETTES

Viking's final exam for the graduate.

True or False:

_____ I will always need clothes and therefore could use a sewing machine.

_____ I should have a machine that weighs under 20 lbs., so I can take it everywhere.

_____ I need a machine for a small apartment or a dormitory room.

_____ My machine should sew everything from canvas seat covers to delicate lingerie.

_____ My sewing machine should be built to last, warranted for 25 years.

If you answered "true" to most of the questions above, we've got the perfect graduation gift idea. The Viking's 5610 portable sewing machine. It's the first lightweight that doesn't take sewing lightly. Makes more stitches than most heavyweights. Never needs oiling. Refuses to jam. And like the rest of the Viking family, it's downright rugged. In fact, chances are your Viking 5610 will still be going strong when your daughter graduates. Want to see how it works? See us.

PEP CLUB...

Thanks Dr. D. for helping us through a year marked by drastic changes. The new sweaters for the sophomores, the senior vice president who was really a senior!, and a Homecoming ceremony without rain! Those 6:45 breakfasts at Putsch's Coffeehouse will be fond memories forever. The lack of all school assemblies was difficult to deal with but we managed. "Time in a Bottle" and "You Light Up My Life" were well planned and beautifully constructed. Congratulations to both Ann and Maureen. Susan, Marilyn, and Barb — you have done your jobs well. Your time and talents were much appreciated.

—Janice

RAIDERETTES

Miss Beard, The times we've had together are special and are to be treasured. We've each given a part of ourselves to each other and that part will stay with us forever. So in the years to come we'll get together often and reflect upon the old memories and create new ones. Love, 77-78 Raiderettes

Dad, We love you lots, thanks for everything...

Barbery II

SHARES THE SEBRING SECRET. . . .

Sebring has the secret of great-looking hair. It starts with the famous Sebring cut, the proven technique, individually designed to suit your style and personality.
It continues with the whole range of Sebring Professional hair-care products, each one especially formulated to give you attractive, healthy, manageable hair.
But that isn't all. We will give you the best advice in town on how to easily keep your hair looking great between visits.
Now isn't that a secret worth sharing?
At Barbery II, we do individually designed perms, hair frosting and painting. We also do NAIL WRAPPING at our Meadowbrook location.

"a.p.e.'s in their true environment-what could be more natural?"

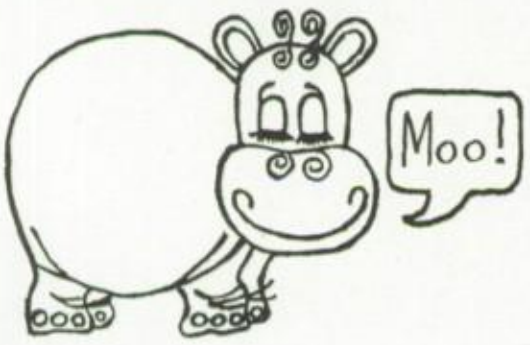
In the Age of Transition, there was Jackie:
"... then there was the time I was in a graveyard at midnight, reading Emily Dickinson poetry by candlelight and drinking rather bad wine. But that's another story."

Shakespeare's mother was an Avon lady.

"HELL IS NOW A PAVED PARKING LOT.



"The paths of glory lead but to the grave."
Yes folks, we're all starry-eyed idealists! ☺
HOW MANY ANGELS CAN DANCE ON THE HEAD OF A PIN?

"Would you make quietus with a bare bodkin?

"Alas, poor Yorick! I knew him, ... Horatio?"

If you think you're irreplaceable, stick your finger in a bowl of water and watch the Hole it leaves.

Nelkenbaum Schmidt Wien CCH Sr. maniac Renob Yardape Chink Cruddy

Click-chomp!
What'cha doin' over there?
Renob Power
Ah, no, no, no...
Chick-a-choo
Gay or what? Definitely not what
Festive
Z-out
Are you coming?
Reb, top and zob
AWOOO!
Oh, quit this
Shoo, shoo... there brickwall
Sure we wouldn't
She's not
I'll pretend...
I don't even believe it!
Go ahead & pretend
If you're not the gayest thing

Duck, Duck, Duck, Goose
Read my lips...
I love it!
Peace, Love, Drugs (hit-hit) hard drugs
Purty nice but I'm not sure!
EEEEYOW!!!
T.T.F.N.
Cute, but not very
Note I'm Laughing
_____ you very much!
Bothers you-me
E-yup
You gay wolf
Guess you had to be there-
-obviously
Eet ees!
What's the problem
I don't understand
Really bothers me
I wish you'd give it up!

Special recognition and thanks goes to many individuals for their contributions in making the '78 Heritage a success.

Opening section—John DeCloud and Keith Timberlake of DeCloud Studios for the majority of the pictures; Paul Murphy, John Eisele and Dave Kraus for supplementary prints. Kathy Brussell for the copy.

To the people of Inter-Collegiate Press, especially Mr. Bob Gadd for his invaluable advice and time for which he devoted to the opening section, cover and other facets of the '78 Heritage.

DeCloud Studios provided individual class pictures and many formal and group shots.

Thanks to Chris Rossie and Jim Giglione for their time and talents in helping with the sports section.

Thanks to the people of Shawnee Mission South for without them this would not be possible.

Special thanks to Ms. Judy Dreiling for pushing us to the top.

I now find it pathetically amusing that I assumed one year of hard work on this publication as a junior would prepare me for an editorship as a senior. Actually, nothing could have really prepared me. I soon found that my own periodic lapse in sanity was exceeded only by an uncanny ability to have things go wrong at the last possible moment. However, I think I can cope with the remainder of my life as long as I never have to schedule or take another group pic! Thanks have to go to Carla C. and Greco, my two staffers who muddled loyally with me through the academic section. I may have been picky, you guys, but it paid off! A special thanks and congrats to C.B. and Fig — for it was together with you that I had to pull the hardest of all. Even during all the unbelievably hectic times (i.e. 10:00 deadlines, pizza and grape drink) I was still strangely happy, for I was doing something worthwhile that I truly love. Nothing can replace the experience or sense of accomplishment I have gained by working on the HERITAGE. I only hope the students will find it to be the great success that I have.

Kathy Brussell

Memories of the year will never leave me. It has flown by faster than ever and also has been the most fun. At first, I almost thought it was impossible to produce such a terrific yearbook, but with a fantastic staff, we did it! Thanks for the great times everyone, especially Teresa and Charlie. After all the billing, leaves, BS, and trips to the office, I would be one worn out senior without you. The photography was beautiful, guys. And to those that sold and bought ads, many, many, many thanks to you. I hope you like it.

Sara Samuels

Upon completion of these final pages, I recall wondering many times this past year if it was really worth all the effort. The time and thought put into the design and content of this book is more than anyone can imagine, including myself. This book has become a part of me, a very special part, despite the many aggravating moments and the many tears that were shed.

I will treasure my experience as the editor of the '78 HERITAGE, for I was lucky enough to have a staff that wouldn't settle for second best, even when the chips were down. Thanks Ms. Dreiling for going above and beyond the call of duty. Words cannot express my appreciation to the six girls who made this book complete. To my three sports — Who needs an editor?

Now that we are finally released from our year of work we only have one deadline left — the approval of our peers. I truly believe the success to be found in the '78 HERITAGE is in the pride that binds it together. I hope you enjoy the book.

Carla Bogucki

No one outside a yearbook staff could comprehend the amount of time, thought, dedication and plain hard work it takes to produce a yearbook. This chronicle of events, HERITAGE '78, is dedicated to you people who receive it. Hopefully it will help you relive your high school years every time you hold it in your hands.

Thanks to my two terrific staff members, Marjorie and Becky. I never said it would be easy! Carla — thanks for putting up with me. "Rosie the Rickety Raider Rides Again!" Ms. Dreiling — disagreement is the spice of life. Perhaps if we weren't both so stubborn . . . Kathy — once was hard, twice was insane and impossible. Perhaps with the finished product in our hands, we'll know why we did it.

Janice Teller

We, the yearbook staff, close our drawers, push back our chairs and breathe a sigh of relief. For many months we have toiled — and this is the finished product, the '78 HERITAGE. May it bring memories of happy times, important events, thrills and disappointments, casual conversations and all the many incidents of high school life. These things we will remember throughout our lives, and it is these things we have tried to recapture for you. To Allison and Doug, my special thanks, without you it wouldn't have been possible. My past year as Ads-Index Editor has been at times frustrating and unbearable, but looking at this book now, the feeling of reward and accomplishment make it all worthwhile. This year has passed, but I am certain the many memories we all cherish will remain forever in this, the '78 HERITAGE.

Mary James

My two year experience on the Heritage staff has been one of best in all my thirteen years of school. Not being the type of person involved with several different groups, my work on the yearbook staff enabled me to know a greater cross section of people, to know what is going on and to appreciate it.

Cheri and Karen, I hope this year has meant as much to you as it has to me. Thank you for your time. Carla, you were a great help to me, you seemed to have a special source of time and patience.

To all those who worked to diligently to produce HERITAGE '78, I will leave you with this thought for it expresses my feeling towards our creation. "This book is my house. The door is open and I shall enter. I shall be happy here because my house has so many windows. Here I will find laughter, beauty, and happiness." —Anonymous

Working on this book has been an experience I will never forget. The long hours spent alphabetizing, counting pictures, drawing and redrawing layouts all seem much more significant when the HERITAGE is finally completed. All of the frustration and worry is now forgotten and in its place is a feeling of pride. As editors of the '78 HERITAGE we have a right to be proud! We have created a unique book and in our minds there will never be another one that measures up. To MJ, Carla and all the editors, thanks for your support and friendship. You people mean the world to me. To Pam and Gretchen, WE DID IT! Finally to the student body, I hope this book will help you remember the good as well as the bad of this past year at South.

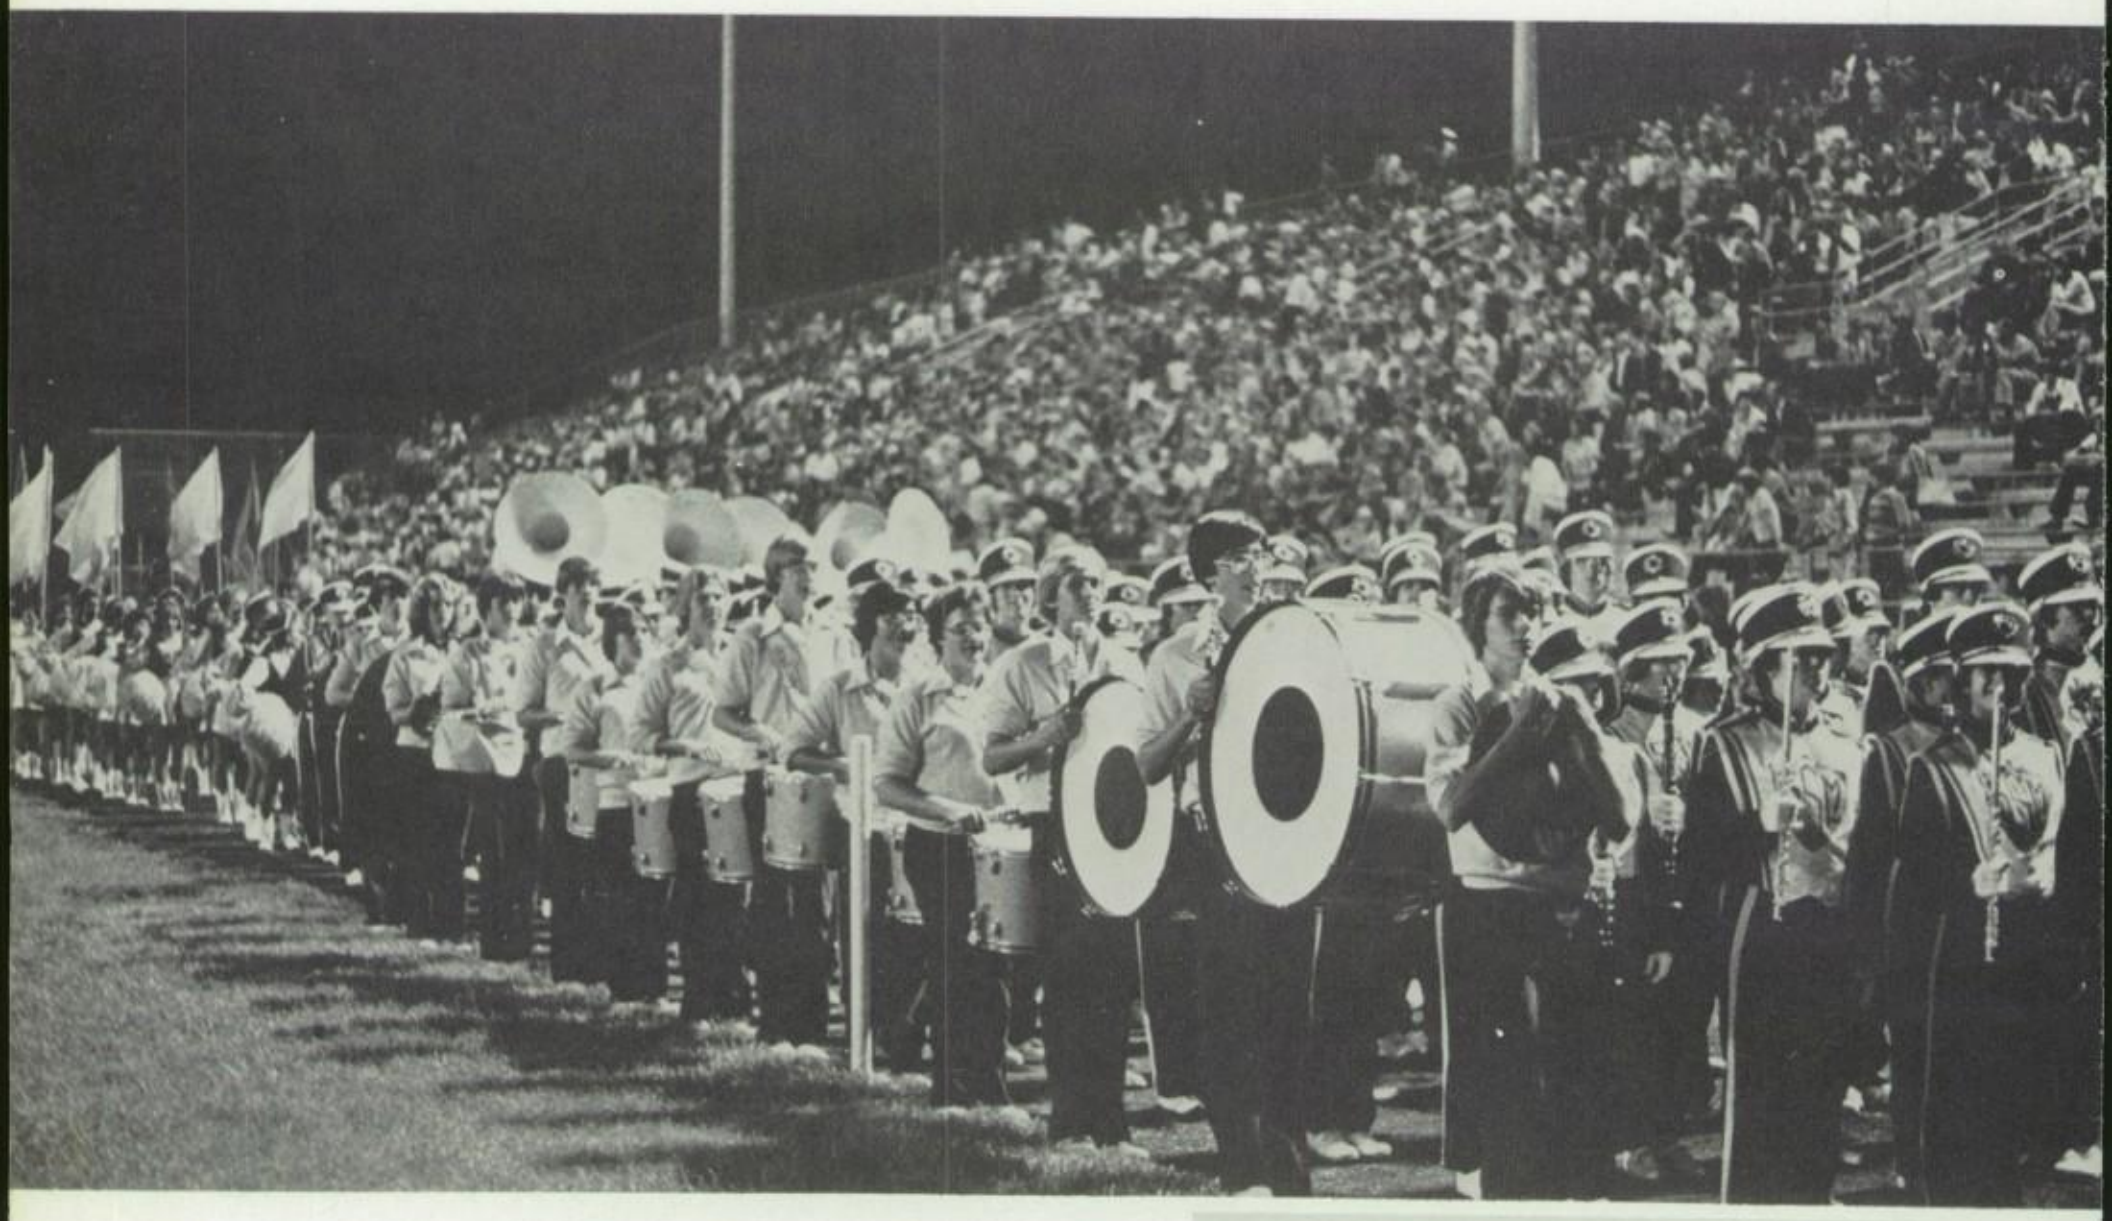
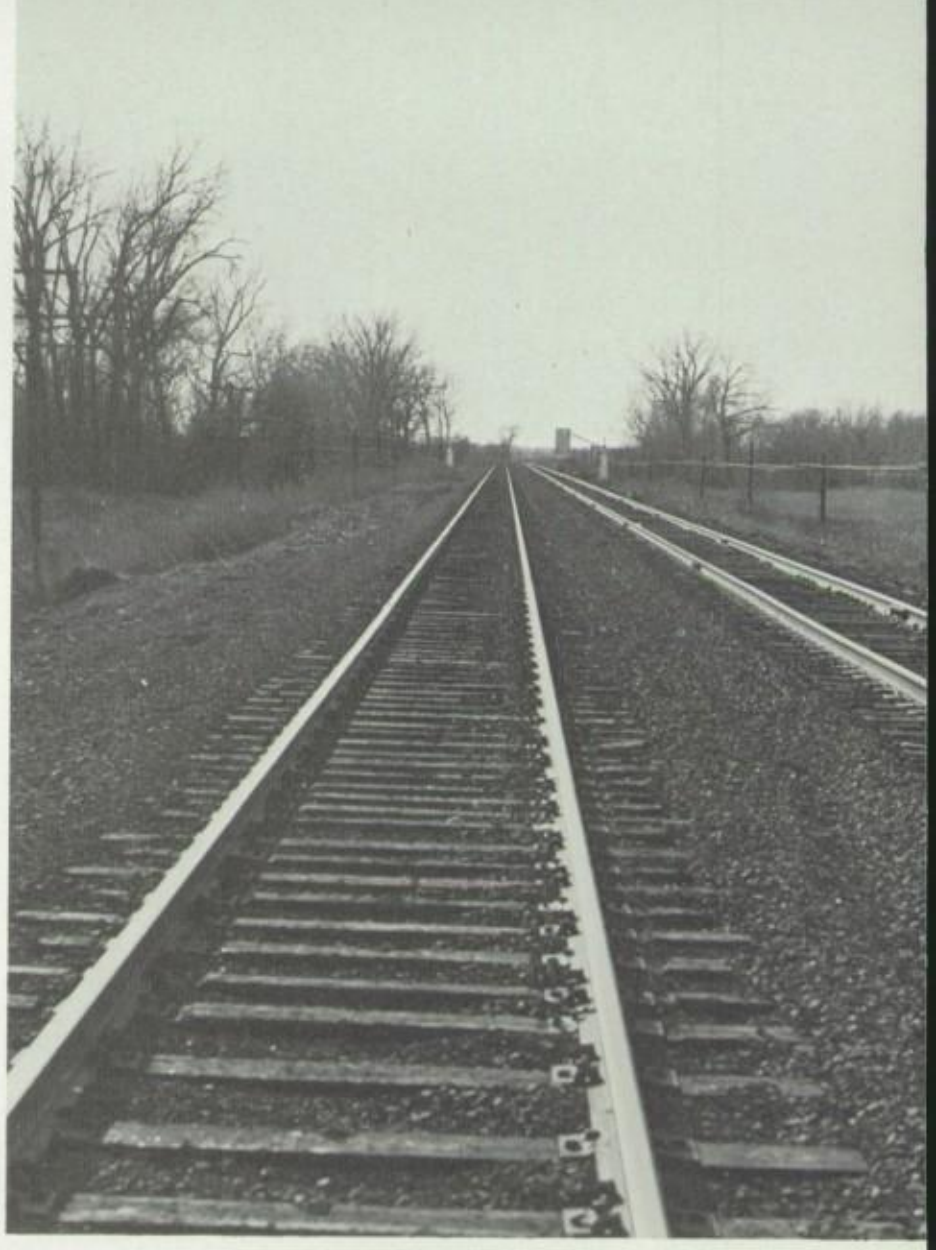
ONE WAY

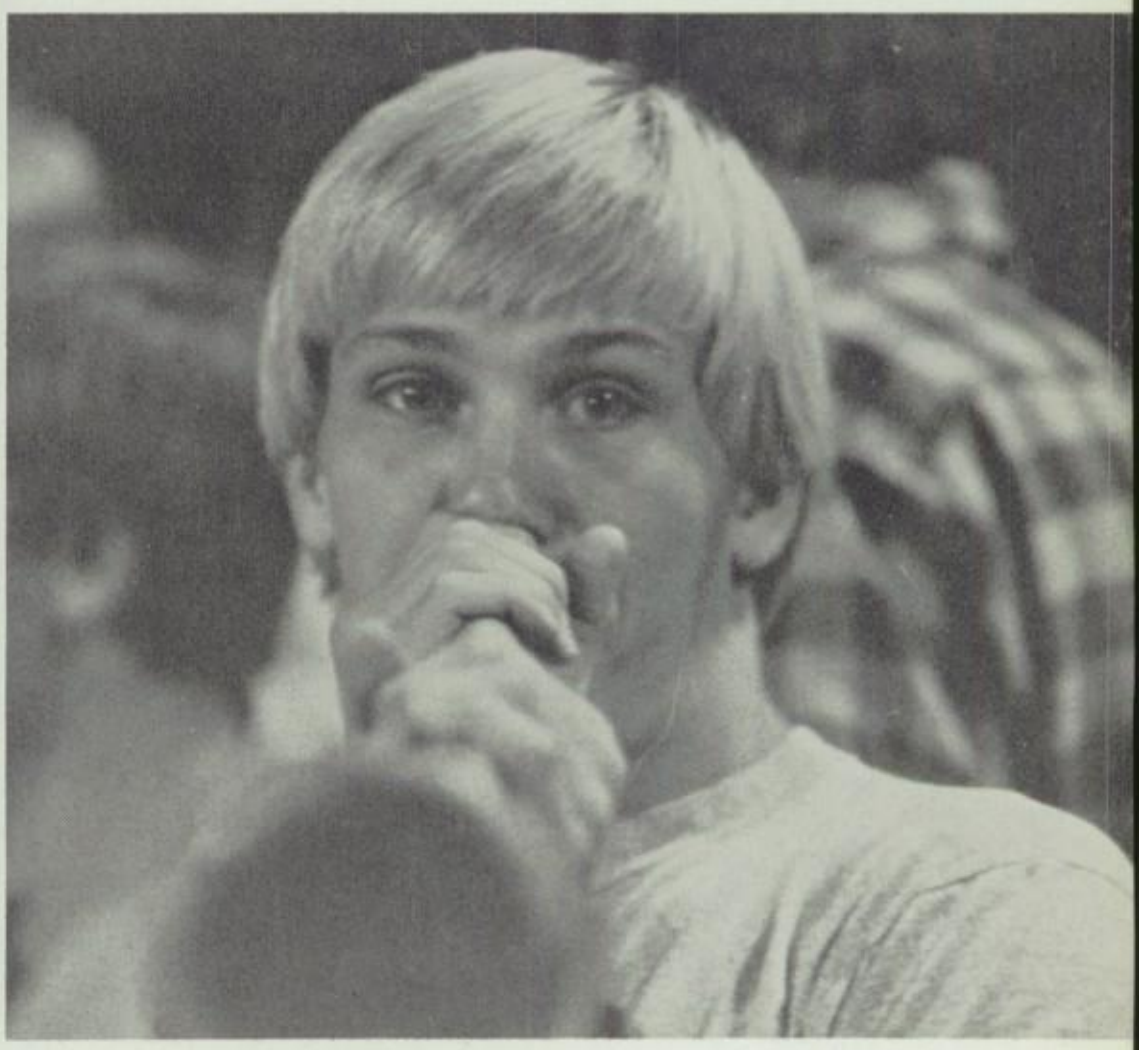
IBM

As we pause to evaluate our own self-worth, we are sometimes amazed by what we have been able to accomplish. We have created with our hands, reasoned with our minds, and fought with our muscles. Every victory gained will be carried with us into our future lives. Some of us will continue along an established path that has become the norm, while others will forever be innovative and daring enough to attempt the unconventional.



But as we leave, it is seldom without throwing a wistful glance behind us. Memories of the tears and the laughter we shared will make everything we've been through seem somehow worthwhile. In the years to come, we shall no doubt find ourselves longing for these past days when it seemed so much easier to play the game—and more importantly still, to win. Yet as much as we may think of these times, we know it is impossible to relive them.





So we look forward instead to the challenges that await us. Although we may fear the vastness of the future, we also recognize its potentials. We have the choice of meeting tomorrow with determination to succeed, or with uncertainty that could lead to failure. Fortunately, the friendships that have bonded us together and the knowledge that has been stored within us provide us all with the strength we need to end up winners.
